Tilly, on the other hand, opted to remain silent, instead giggling with an impossibly smug grin plastered to her face while Shion fumed.

Question!
If someone puts Chiaki into an illusion where she sees what she wants to see, can the three stooges tell her she is in an illusion? Presumably they would still see what Chiaki REALLY sees, rather than the illusion.

Or if they are also caught in the illusion, they would see different things surely, and since they have a sort of mind-web going on, they could tell things are screwy?

Basically, do the three stooges looking through Chiakis eyes offer some degree of illusion protection?

"Ladies, please," Prime said with a hollow, chilling smile on her face, "can we just - for a moment - please focus?" The three girls promptly settled down at the sight of their senior's expression. Ingrid gave a slight nod and Prime continued, "Thank you. Ladies, we have been planning this job for months. We have two weeks ahead of us that will make or break this entire operation. Everything's already in place, all we need now is a spark to set off the fireworks.

“I would have liked a little build-up,' Prime continued,” bit of 'dramatic escalation' if you will - but old Joe's gettin' cold feet and wants the show to start before the new Warmaster's official inauguration. From this point on, there will be no screw ups, no procrastination, and absolutely no FUCKING AROUND on the job. Each of you has a reason for being here, and I have a reason for KEEPING each of you here. If I stop having a reason to keep you, then I start having a reason to put you out of service. Am I clear?"

"Good," Prime said, before she began to bark out orders of each of the other magical girls, pointing to them as she did. "Ingrid, we already talked about your next job. I want that done tomorrow. Understand?"

"Consider it done~"

"Mathilda, I need you to make the plant as soon as you possibly can. I want the Warmaster in our pocket before the week is done."

"Yes, ma'am."

"Shion, contact Vance and give her a status update, then sit tight and keep monitoring things until further orders."

Shion adjusted her glasses and nodded without a word.

"And me?" Asked a fifth voice from behind Prime's chair. Another girl, at least as tall as Prime and Ingrid stepped forward from the corner of the room, placing her hand on Prime's shoulder. Her face was unnaturally shadowed beneath the hood of long, bright orange, short-sleeved coat - Surrey

Reid, the closest any of them came to Prime's second-in-command.

None of the others - save for Prime herself - seemed to notice that the fifth girl had been in the room the entire time. The gambler's poker face momentarily slipped into shocked surprise, the snake-charmer smirked and laughed to herself, and the technician glanced at the others, trying to make sure that she wasn't the only one caught off-guard.

"You, my dear," the senior said, patting the newcomer's hand, "have the dubious honour of keeping this ship afloat while I step away for a few days to meet with some of our friends."

"Elly?"

Prime murmured a quiet affirmative, then said, "Can't exactly pull this off in two weeks without her help."

"Well then," Surrey said, looking up at the others, "let's kill us an Officio. Hydra dominatus."

In perfect synchronization, each of them clasped a fist to their chest and echoed her in perfect, unearthly harmony.

EXITUS RIFLE

The Iron Circle

Chapter V: Murderers

Many found the sounds of machinery to be crude and noisome. Loud, irascible, grating on the ears. Noise pollution, something to block out with a good pair of earmuffs.

For Petra, there was no sound more melodious than the high-pitched whine of a drill-bit.

She carefully guided the bit in a smooth, looping pattern, letting the diamond-tip bite into the polished metal of the rifle barrel. Her work was nearly finished—all that was left was a bit of gilding to apply here and there. She pulled the drill back back and revealed a line of flowing script etched into the weapon, written in Latin:

EXITUS ACTA PROBAT

'The Outcome Justifies The Deed'. The words—and the rifle they were carved onto—seemed appropriate for the intended recipient: a tool of murder for a murderer, who led a pack of murderers.

Like the rest of the Magical Girl world, Petra had heard much but ultimately knew little about the Ninth's new Warmaster. Her most famous epithet fit the rumors, in any case. Already the Amanuros Order's data-sifters had picked up rumors about an incident at the Big Shell facility: how the infamous Murderface butchered some of the Sixteenth's best agents, and took apart a combat robot so advanced it made Fiona grumble with jealousy. How the Shell was a smoking ruin after the Murderers had done their work.

The Sixteenth guarding the Big Shell had been wearing Mk. I 'Cadre' powered armor, too, mused Petra. State-of-the-art stealth-capable powered armor, made right in the Olympia's own factories. Yet the Sixteenth's reinforcements found most of them lying in pieces, their heavy support robot somehow bisected down the middle, and an important asset from the premises stolen. No losses reported from the Ninth, either.

Sobering to think about, these Murderers.

Fiona had questioned the decision to offer the 'Exitus' rifle as a gift. “Makes us look weak, Petra,” she'd said. “Make us look like we're submitting. Offering tribute, like some sort of weaker country buying off a stronger one.”

Her temper and paranoia aside, the Fabricator-Genreral had a point: play the game wrong, and it really would look like Petra was begging favors from one of the most unlikely Warmasters in Officio history. But, reasoned Petra, no doubt Matsuda herself felt vulnerable. She'd need help from the diplomatic corps to spin it right, but Petra decided to strike while the iron was hot; a new Warmaster with a clean slate was a chance for the Fourth to make friends, build alliances.

Fiona had questioned that, too: the strongest are strongest alone, she'd said, and no one was mightier than the Machines. But then, Petra had tired of this debate a long time ago.

At last satisfied with her work, Petra raised the rifle into the workshop's light.

The rifle was a somewhat blocky weapon, taking the form of a long-barreled marksman's gun, complete with a long-range scope. Various modular weapon parts rested on the table nearby. A bulky cylinder that could render the rifle whisper-silent, a shortened barrel and extended magazine that could turn it into an assault weapon, even a slew of specialized rounds designed to deliver anything from a tank-killing anti-armor shot to a localized napalm blast; the tools of the rifle's bloody trade gazed back from where the sat, and were Petra the superstitious sort, she might have felt their anger and their unwholesome desire to be used.

It was one of her better works, felt Petra. She felt that warm, pleasant buzz of satisfaction so familiar to a craftsman after a job well done, and hoped its intended recipient would put it to good use.

Something chimed. A message icon appeared in the corner of her vision.

<New message received. Sender: Fiona Mac Manus. Subject: You're not going to fucking believe this>

Petra paused and set the rifle back down as she read the message.

As Warmaster of an Officio unlike any other, one both unique and isolated from the rest of the world, Petra found that very few things surprised her.

What she found in the message was one of those things.

“Well, I guess it solves -that- mystery.”

The two of them were walking down the halls of the Olympia: Petra on the left, Fiona on the right. Their pace was hurried, as the curious news they had received could wait for nothing.

“All this time, we were wondering where the hell the 'Indomitus' pattern Tactical Dreadnought suit went,” said Fiona, snorting. “And it turns out the bitches in the Ninth had stolen it.”

Petra remained silent. The gears in her head, both literal and figurative, turned as she mulled over the situation.

Just a few minutes ago, she had received a message from the Ninth Officio Assassinorum. A request, it seemed, to send someone from the Fourth to repair the 'Terminator' armor in question, to be completed as soon as possible. Petra wasn't sure what the Ninth had been doing with the thing—if the pictures they had sent were accurate, it looked as though they had tossed it into an active volcano and fished it back out.

For the Fourth, the normal response was retribution. Demands to have the armor returned, an additional fee penalizing the theft; refusal would beget an arms embargo, perhaps even the threat of force, or threaten to have the Olympia turn their Officio's worthless holdings to glass.

In an earlier age this was precisely what Petra would have done, without hesitation or mercy. You do not simply steal Fourth Officio property, break it, and then have the temerity to ask for help in fixing it—without the hammer of the Fourth breaking your bones.

But, as they say, times have changed.

Fiona let out a growl. “I know I'm due in Britain in a few hours, but give me a squad and I'll get the 'Indomitus' back. With interest. Whether it's paid in cash or blood is up to them.”

Petra answered with silence.

“Warsmith?” said Fiona, nonplussed. “Oi, Warsmith. Petra!”

“I heard you,” said Petra. “And I'm not sending you. I'm sending Speaker Falko.”

That made Fiona come to a dead halt. “What? Did your vox just glitch out, or did you just tell me you're sending that two-faced little snake to get our property back from the Murderers?”

“That wasn't a vox glitch. I'm sending Barbara Falko to get the 'Indomitus' back. If at all.”

It took Fiona a moment for the last part to sink in. “'If at all'?” she said, incredulous. “You can't mean to...” The Fabricator-General grabbed Petra by the upper arm. “Dammit, Petra, we're the Fourth, not a goddamn charity! You know how many months we spent researching and developing that armor? How much money we put into it? Now you're just going to give it all away to the people who stole it? What the hell is wrong with you?”

She leaned her visored head forward. “The more of our secrets you sell off in trying to make 'friends', the less important we are to the rest of the world. You keep forgetting that. We don't have numbers like the Ninth, we don't have local popular support like the Sixth. We don't have the Fourteenth's influence, and we're not low-profile like the Seventeenth. We lose our technology and we're scrap, because technology is what we are.” Her silver arms trembled as spat the words out. “And knowing all that, you want us to just give away the one thing that'll give us back our edge? Are you insane?”

Petra grasped Fiona's offending limb by the forearm. “You're jumping to conclusions, Fiona. First: I'm not necessarily going to give it to them for free, that will depend on how negotiations go. Second: if I do let them keep it, there will be a point to it. It'll be a good way to build relations between us and a fresh Warmaster of the largest and one of the most powerful Officios in existence. Because you're right, we're not a charity. Third: it's just a prototype. All else fails, we can build a new one if we really need to, and the R&D was almost finished anyway. I also doubt the Ninth can reverse-engineer it that quickly. Fourth:”

There was a creak, a groan of metal protest, as Petra's grip tightened. “If you take that tone with me again, Fabricator-General, I will consider that insubordination and I will punish you without mercy. I don't care if we're friends, I don't care if you're one of my Triarchs: I am Warmaster, and my word is law.” With a flick, she threw aside the dented silver arm.

“Insubordination?” said Fiona as she checked over her arm. Her tone was tense, but lacked even a modicum of fear. “Thought you made me a Triarch because I spoke the truth. Even if it hurt.”

“I made you a Triarch to tell me the truth, Fiona, not whine at me like a yappy little dog.”

Fiona glared at Petra for a moment, before letting out a harsh chuckle.

“Ha ha! True. But I'll say it again.” She resumed striding forwards. “Handing out shiny trinkets won't do anything except maybe get you a smile or two. A good way to by gratitude, but not respect.”

“Hmph. I'll keep that in mind—hmm?”

<New message received. Sender: Fabricator Gamal Jazerant. Subject: Re: Message from the Ninth>

Fiona turned back towards Petra. The Warmaster had come to a full stop, gazing off into nothing as she read the new missive. “Eh? What's wrong?"

(6/10)

“Hmm,” murmured the Warsmith. “Just got a note from Fabricator Jazerant. I think this will make you rethink taking back the 'Indomitus' from the Murderers.”

“That'll be the day,” said Fiona with a snort. “What's it say?”

“Hnh. Well, with a technician like that, dunno why they're calling us.” Fiona idly checked her dented vambrace again. “Who is it? Think we should throw an invite their way? This one might be more promising than that Iwakura girl.”

Petra made a sound not unlike whisper-purr of a moving servo. It took Fiona a second to realize the Warmaster had chuckled. “Even if we do invite her, I doubt she'll come back.”

That made Fiona pause. 'Come back'? The Fabricator-General couldn't think off the top of her head of anyone the mystery person could be. And did Petra just laugh? This, she thought, was a day of surprises.

Fiona let out a chuckle herself. “Alright, and who's this genius who decided to leave us and never come back?”

Before them, the engraved doors of the Mechanicus facilities groaned open, bringing the Warmaster and her Fabricator-General to the familiar sight of heavy industry. Already, a pair of Fabricators were scurrying about, preparing tools, drones, and supplies for the journey to Japan, while others looked to their own duties.

As she observed her girls at work, Petra answered the Fabricator-General. There was a rare twinge of amusement in her voice.

“Do you remember little Misaka? Russian girl, had a brother—”

“—who was a reedy little shit, kept whining about stuff he found on the internet? I remember them. Why do you...wait.”

Realization struck like a hammer blow.

“Really,” said the Warmaster.

“...yes.”

“Huh.”

Fiona stared at the hulking silhouette that sat at the back of the chamber. The 'Cataphract' suit gazed back, like a stern, vigilant god made of beaten and hammered metal. Then the Fabricator-General looked back at Petra.

Barbara Falko had been in her quarters, tending to a bit of her leg where the paint had come off. The thin brush in her hand dripped with blue paint as she read and reread the missive.

'The Warsmith wants me to do -what-?'

She paused, then reread the message from the beginning.

'Mission objectives: coordinate between Fabricators Feist and Stein, and the Ninth Officio Assassinorum during repairs of 'Indomitus' Tactical Dreadnought armor system; deliver package to Chiaki Matsuda. Whether or not we demand the 'Indomitus' back is left to your discretion.” Oh? So that's where that thing ended up. She hauled herself off of her chair and began putting away her paint supplies. 'And “left to my discretion”...'

Ah, the Ninth, thought Barbara as she packed her things and made her way down to the hangar bays. She had already been assigned to represent the Fourth during the new Warmaster's ratification ceremony, which she figured was just going to be a milk run. This, however, made things a little more interesting.

The diplomacy game with them was never dull. None of the overly-stiff formality of the Second, or the coarse bluntness of the Sixth: professional, subtle, and sharp as knives, those Murderers. She'd never had the chance to meet the great Malal—that infamous Equerry and Culexus Rank leader—which she regretted. She would rather have liked to meet the genius behind the Animus Speculum, but cataclysmic incursions into reality by abominations that had no right to exist had a way of ending one's dreams.

And there, of course, was the infamous “Golden Goddess”. By virtue of not living under the rock, Barbara had heard much about Mami Tomoe and her immaculate qualities. How she was perfect, how she the pinnacle of being a Magical Girl, how legions of girls around the world wanted to be -just like her-. Barbara wondered if this at last was her chance to see what lay beneath that flawless mask.

Digging through the honeyed words and the posturing and the body language to uncover the hidden agenda lying beneath was a requisite skill for any good diplomat, as it revealed precisely what the other party was trying to do. Any general worth the title had to know the enemy's intentions in order to formulate a plan to defeat it, and the negotiation table was just as much a battlefield as any.

Barbara also refused to believe any human could be so perfect the way Tomoe purportedly was. Not without keeping a skeleton or two locked away. After all, only a machine could be so perfect, and last time she checked, the blonde Vindicare was still only human.

So what was Mami Tomoe's agenda? What secrets was she hiding? Why would a someone, one so unrivaled in all aspects of being a Magical Girl, set aside becoming the Warmaster of the largest and one of the most powerful Officios in the world, letting a surly, sub-optimal drunk take her place? After having been Warmaster-in-training for so long, no less. Yet, when the time came, she obediently stepped down from her seat, and, if rumor were to believed, even openly supported her successor.

Oh yes. The upcoming Ratification ceremony in Japan was going to be interesting.

Barbara let out a sigh as she opened the doors to the Olympia's aircraft hangers. One of the gunships—similar to the one that brought Honoka to the Fourth—was being prepped for takeoff, maintenance crew and repair drones swarming around and atop of it like so many ants. One of the mechanics informed her that they still needed a few minutes before the plane was ready for take off, so Barbara opted to while away the time by reading up on the Ninth Officio.

“Fabricators Stein and Feist are on their way, Barbara,” said one of the mechanics. “Bring me back something cool, alright?”

As she skimmed her way through some intel files on the Ninth, nagging little voice gnawed away at her heart. She wondered if she was being too suspicious, too eager to dig up the old, rotting bones lying inside everyone's wardrobe. The Executor Fetial, Djara Crusius, often criticized her for that; a degree of vigilance is always good for a diplomat, she'd said, but paranoia is not. A degree of trust is needed, or communication is impossible.

Perhaps her boss and the head of the Emmeles diplomatic corps had a point. Or, perhaps, Crusius was just naïve. The Executor Fetial liked to say—shout from the rooftops, even—that the Fourth needed to open up to the outside world. Shed its long-standing image of being crazy hermits obsessed with tinkering. No wonder the Warsmith made her one of the Triarchs, what with her new policy of trying to make friends with the outside world.

Heh. Fiona Mac Manus was grouchy for -days- after -that- promotion ceremony.

Oh well, thought Barbara as she rose and made to follow. Officio politics weren't really to Barbara's tastes. Let the Fabricator-General and the Executor Fetial fight their petty squabbles; her job, as far as she was concerned, was to make sure the Fourth came out ahead in any deal or negotiation, and nothing else.

As she stepped up into the plane's cabin, Barbara idly wondered what sort of festivities the Ninth had planned.

The Riddle of Witch Flesh - Part 4

It's time to continue with this story. There is still much to record, and so much more I should rather be thinking of instead.

Let's see: Where I've last left off, a Vanus of the Twelfth, whose name I've had yet to learn, was staring at the abyss.

With a commendable presence of mind, one of the Vindicare girls around had managed to raise her gun the moment she understood what's happening. I saw her fire off the hip earlier, and it was because she now took a split second to properly aim at the crumbling Gem, that she was too late. We could have saved ourselves a lot of trouble right there. The newly formed Grief Seed vanished into thin air, and her shot had passed through an already dead body.

As fast as Barbara's storm went by, the wind had started picking up again. The sky took on an increasingly darker tone, and it was obvious a Barrier was being set up. But, aside from another dead body we now had on our hands, the Witch herself was nowhere around.

Strange. If they Witch out right before you, you normally appear at the center, or at least very close near her. This seemed like there would be a whole Labyrinth to go through.

In place of an antenna on the rooftop shack stood a telephone pole. Where you could earlier see roof bracing were now high walls of barbed wire. Instead of a field of laundry poles, there was a whole load of semaphores and traffic signs - the incomprehensible, long kind, with a ton of different colors, that you normally see on railways. And indeed, rather then a plastic tube for wires smelted into the roof ground, we suddenly had a pair of rails under our feet. In addition to dust and dirt, ground was now littered with gravel, the sun had turned into a blood tinted moon, and sooner than you could blink, we were in a brand new world yet again.

A lot of Barriers take on the properties of the place where the girl had Witched out, but this one was pretty particular about exactly how it wanted to look. This reality bending power doesn't come from the mind. According to Panna, the power of a Witch depends less on the personal competency of the girl, and more on her karma.

The research of karma is something Librarians are fascinated by - it's apparently the magical equivalent of rocket science, but simply put, it's metaphysical weight, or objective importance. It seems to be difficult to judge and measure. This raises the question I'd ask a lot later: Was this pale, lanky druggie important somehow?

Even if that was so, she is now a statistic in the Archive. Sometimes this job makes me and our other Eversors feel like a daybreak garbage squad of the magical girl world. Waking up almost every day, knowing that you'll have to clean up other people's mess again, never knowing how much of it will be actual feces. I am the boss, so I've even got the incineration part down.

This time, though, things were different.

"So, Popelka, this one is on you." I've told her, moving on the track's side, but still keeping the sudden high ground of the rail embankment, since it was so demonstrative. "Do you want to have your girls taking her out too? You know you're done with the first hunt now, so you can really just kind of heel turn and go home, if you want."

She turned to the recovering squad. "Yeah, I'm definitely going to take the overtime here, myself. Not like I've got anything better to do. You others, though, bail if you feel like it." She raised both her hands, and made gestures to illustrate both choices, which made her look all the more like an instructor. "Being proactive is good, but judging your capabilities right matters a lot more. With Barbara, you've just seen some of the most insane stuff that Witches can do. It's all downhill from here. This is a fresh Barrier and I hear the train coming from this side of the rail, so you've probably just got to go in the other, and you're out. But don't actually go into the tracks, pretty sure they are the worst place to be here."

As a matter of fact, there was only one pair of those. Clearly, the train could only go one way.

They've all seemed to be deeply considering it. Screw all that "Ma'm, best of the best ma'm!" garbage you'd hear elsewhere, but still. I may never have managed to fully accept that for all their quirky talents, the Twelfth is still a bunch of wimps. There are so many tomboys, too! These costumes the Vindicare are wearing are spiffy, but you can still mostly recognize the Twelfth's dressing theme. It's much more striking with Eversors. Uniforms, sportswear, work clothes, casual clothes, even Kamile's costume was a frilly tracksuit.

I mean, what kind of a girl fulfills her childhood hopes by putting on pants? I'd hate to step on thin ice here by bringing sexuality into it all, maybe they just happen to get costumes like that. Each seems to have their own explanation for it. It sort of creates a romantic image of gentlemen that guard the princesses, those being Vanus. If only they could follow the image through with strength of character, or at least a basic sense of responsibility.

Well, that was one problem solved. I appreciated having nine girls do my work for me, since I'd have to rely on magic much more with only one hand. Another concern to deal with - that my arm was wrecked, and few of the girls had gotten some cuts in Barbara's barrier as well. And aside from cleaning the wound with flames, I suck at healing. If Panna was more lax with her Venenum students, we could have those battle auxiliary Venenum, but no such luck.

My normal approach would be toughing it out and using the limb like nothing's wrong. But nine girls were looking at me now, and that would set a terrible example. Can't expect that from everyone. Fortunately, there was an option I had just for this situation, even though it felt tempting to ignore it again.

Panna's potions are indeed something I try to not think about. Like, well, a lot of things. The sight of a Warmaster riding the Love Potion, working off her four months, and becoming more and more of a wreck, until she can't hold it together anymore and expands the list of high profile Witches, that really burns itself into your mind. I think we never actually were supposed to see any of them, not us Rank Leaders, not even most of the Librarians, but damn, I did. That's how I found out that Panna can screw up like every other person.

I did have a makeup case with some of her stuff in it, but it still felt completely reprehensible. You would kind of expect Panna to put some contingency mind control drugs in it, or use the normals-can't-see-this excuse, due to which you have to always carry it around if you're ever going to use it, to put some kind of a tracking device inside.

See the back of the case below. Now tell me, am I paranoid?

Vászon's alchemical mending cream
- Apply onto and into the wound. Enhances blood, skin, and basic tissue recovery. Effective within a minute, so do it fast.
- Intended for use on: skin cuts, nicked veins and arteries, cleanly cut muscles.
- Not intended to be used on: torn muscle fiber, severed tendons, or wounds that reach internal organs.
- NEVER use on broken bones. If the wound is so nasty that you can't avoid touching it, the cream absolutely must not get into the marrow.

- Uses next to none of your energy, but is set to lose magical properties if no Gem is nearby. Always carry on your person upon receiving.
- Side effects: Immediate hunger, fat loss, muscle mass loss, weight loss, heavy sweating. Leaves scar tissue. After use, eat a big meal, and visit the medical bay or consult the nearest Venenum to have the wound checked.

I've figured it should be alright to use, bone wasn't sticking out, though it was hurting like fractured at least. The bruised and torn skin bled a lot in one spot, probably opened a vein there, that could have been a problem. Then again, making sure you won't bleed out seemed to be the point of this.

It's kind of a mixed blessing, but sustaining the same wound many times can really help your kinesthetic sense. You don't know pleasure until you've had your soul caressed, and much like that, you can hardly call yourself a masochist if you don't even know the pain of having your brain cut.

Having known the extremes also makes you duller to the mundane. Rubbing it in hurt too, but like I am saying, pain is something that gets old. It almost put me off when I've given the case to the wounded squaddies, and they were still making all those silly grimaces and moans when all they had to do was touching a bit of their own flesh.

Finally, the drag was done with. "Let's get a move on. It's your turn to shine now. Can't suffer a Witch to live. You've already been baptized(?) sub utraque specie there, so to say, through both water and fire. I am sure you can handle this. If anything, it will be much easier the second time".

If only I could be this charismatic without the costume on. It really makes it easier to say what I want in an impressive way. It's probably all psychological, I just feel much more confident like this. Which, in the end, may have to with my wish.

"Will those tracks on the ground move, or can she leave them? Damn." Popelka seemed really worried about positioning, and complained that the rail hill was too high to see over, forcing us to keep somebody on the top, which ended up being her.

In the distance, we soon saw her first Familiars, who took a convenient while to appear. Apparently a bunch of winged wheels. They couldn't have been any strong now, and couldn't really beat the group's firepower. Coming from only one place, the tracks, before they've realized they can fly, that didn't help them either.

Good, wouldn't like to be on the front line, there. Blocking attacks that are based on centrifugal force sucks. It's why I use a flail. The wheels would have played rough if they ever got close enough.

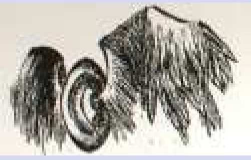
File: 6-9.jpg (104 KB, 728x448)



Wheels. I was reminded of High Marshal Raleigh. Now, we basically see the Blessed Lady as a grim reaper, because she appears around divinations regarding death. They have a whole, fairly pointless, advanced mythology relating to her, and long story short, one of her saints is associated with wheels. The thing is, they approach it in a really naive fashion. Shouldn't religious people know that wheels are martyrdom, and loss of man against fate? I am the ignorant savage of the Twelfth, and even I know this one. You see wheels on the art in churches, basically all the time.

I didn't manage to get a hit in very often. They only ever came from one direction even further in, seeing that the rest was walled off with wires, the corridor around the tracks slowly narrowing. So, they got drowned in curtain fire, and I eventually just kind of withdrew back, so I wouldn't stand in their way. They've managed to progress economically, blasters stepping in when a group would try to break through. It was a bloody hallway, really. With time, maybe, the Barrier could accumulate switches, and turn into a proper Labyrinth, but all the way until we hit the station, it was fairly straightforward.

The station not only had quite a few of the winged wheels waiting, but also had steep concrete walls right around the still only one-way rail, which was worrying. There was barely enough space for half the squad to form a line. In the distance behind it, the sky had carried a small trail of witch letters, that I think were supposed to be the train's hooting.

Soon enough, we could also see her outline, and that's when the weapon users had understood just how massive she is, and started worrying whether they really did well by coming along. "She looks so fast. I don't think my throwing stars will do anything here, ma'm. What do we do when she gets here? Just hit it with everything we've got?"

File: 8-9.jpg (84 KB, 541x495)

Popelka spared the girl no look, instead gesturing the blasters to come forward. "Yeah. This is pretty much exactly why I've recommended you that grenade training. Grenades are good. Now get back."

Curious. My complaint about blasters not knowing how to shoot guns now stood on its head. Popelka is clearly really trying, so it's strange her squad can get away with being that impractical. Can't she just, like, order them to learn certain stuff and bring certain equipment? Martina is quite the iron lady as well, at least with subordinates. Could it be the Librarians filling their heads with bullshit about personal development?

The train Witch had approached soundlessly, but with an overwhelming amount of Witch text all around it. One of the blasters almost fell, and another had to catch and support her, from the sheer volume of letters and wind pressed against us, before it was even in range. There was no earthly way of knowing whether in this station, it was stopping.

The first gunshots and bolts had next to no visible effect on it, but an explosion of pink petals from the blaster with best range had visibly managed to tilt it.

"That's it! More on that side!"

Pure green light, followed by a pair of fireballs and a bolt of golden lightning smashed into her, her locomotive head already completely fallen to the side, but unable to stop anymore. The rest of her body kept pushing her forward. She was vomiting Witch letters everywhere now, the sky and even the rail corridor's walls being almost lost to sight.

I've wanted to yell that she's sliding to the right and to get on the other side, but there was no time to do even that, so I've just grabbed the girl farthest(?) in the danger zone, and jerked her out of the trainwreck's way. Immediately after, the letters overwhelmed us completely, and once they were gone, the whole Barrier was, like it never existed.

I have been scared that we'd get hit by the tail, and wanted to jump, but that wasn't even necessary in the end. No wounds on anyone else, either.

Her Grief Seed had kept the momentum she had, though, and flied quite far into the distance. We had to search for it for solid half an hour, and then we had to fish it from a rain pipe as well.

Who was she, and why did this happen? It boggled my mind all the way through. It may have been the tedious task of scanning every inch of the bordering apartment complex from the rooftop that emptied my mind, and let suspicion seep in like it never did before. I've had it with hypocrisy and being always left in the dark. I was really drawn to the idea of finding out just what her story was.

Basically, she was a good example of all that I hate about the Twelfth. The amount of recruits and transferees, and the 70% witch-out rate. You almost never see anybody being pressed into losing the fight, though, like with bullying or such. I even try to stomp that right out when it turns up, despite it generally being the victim's fault for letting it happen. There obviously was another way this was carried out, and Panna knows why she keeps it out of our sights and minds. Having stayed in the business for years made it feel almost natural, that girls come and go, but for some reason this one was the straw that broke the camel's back, and resulted in me eventually taking action.

For the rest of the day, and since then even until now, I'd be melancholic and contemplative. And emotional, and quite a bit more honest than usual. After five years of having to steel my mind and guilt tripping myself into trying ever harder, something broke.

It broke subtly, and without me noticing.

She really did make a good martyr after all.

MAGICAL GIRL NOIR QUEST
THE FALL OF CHIAKI MATSUDA

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 09/12/14(Fri)09:34:50 No.34809789 Closed

"We'll let you two talk things out. That's important, you know - talking things out. It helps." Vintage chimes cheerfully as you continue to stare at the Callidus you've caught in the act of shadowing you.

You turn here to see the Equerry of the First bend down to snatch up your white furry boss off of the ground, clutching him to her chest like a child would to a favorite pet."Come on, Kyuubey. We've got to do things for a minute or two."

"Yes, but we need to show Matsuda--" Kyuubey begins, squirming in Vintage's grasp.

"We've got to DO THINGS for a MINUTE or TWO," Vintage cuts him off - and you watch as she shuffles into Kyuubey's office with the mutant cat bastard in her arms. "Just step in when you've gotten everything settled. Take your time, I'll keep him busy." The kimono-clad girl whispers this as she passes you by - the double doors swinging shut behind her with a decisive metal click.

Leaving you completely and utterly alone with your full-time girlfriend...and apparently, part-time stalker.

>>34809789

You shake your head again, before waving her over - pinching the bridge of your nose under your glasses as you do so. She obeys quickly and commendably enough, managing to stumble over her own feet only a couple of times.

"...If you're going to do this, don't get caught." You tell Midori as she comes to a stop in front of you, now blowing her nose on a handkerchief she'd pulled out from one of her uniform's pockets. "Now, I know I told you to wait for me back at the hall, but apprently you saw the need to follow me regardless." You glower at her for a few more moments, before crossing your arms over your chest. "Explain."

"Um..." Midori fidgets underneath your stare, breaking eye contact with you and focusing instead on her twiddling thumbs. "I...um, sempai, well.."

You light up a cigarette as the green-haired girl in front of you explains her actions, guilt and perhaps...a tiny bit of jealousy coloring her words. Apparently, Midori had been more than willing to believe your smoke break excuse - but Wendy, your ex, had disappeared five exact seconds after you exited the hall. The fact that no one saw the American leave - not even Midori herself- was enough to get your Callidus out of her chair. Enough to clue her in that something was up.

"...I got worried, so I decided to follow," Midori finally manages to maintain eye contact with you here, albeit a wavering one, as if the act herself caused her physical pain. "...Um, I didn't find her anywhere, but I found you talking to them. Miss Vintage, I mean. And since I lost Wendy but still didn't know who they were, I thought I'd follow and see what was going on, because I was worried...and...and...

"Pleasedon'tstareatmelikethatsempai!" She finally ends her confession in a rush, finally throwing up a hand over her own eyes. "I'm really sorry, I won't do it again, I promise! I was just really worried for Sempai...!"

You blink at her in surprise, despite your own disapproval. ...What? You weren't glaring at her that hard, were you?

Midori shakes her head, still keeping her eyes averted from yours. "It feels like Sempai's trying to burn holes right through m-my soul! It's too intense!"

You furrow your brow at this, before pulling out your cellphone and glancing at your reflection on the touchscreen. The sight very nearly making you drop the delicate device.

Midori was right. You do look like you're trying to glare holes through someone's soul.

Your eyes, forever changed by the procedure you undertook in Siberia, are glowing. Specifically, your pupils - the crimson dots set in the middle of your purple irises now small pinpricks of blazing red light, as if backlit by hate strong enough to manifest as fire.

You look fucking evil, is what you're trying to get at here.

"A-anyway, Sempai, that's...that's why I followed you." Midori's awkward follow-up to her confession snaps your attention back towards her - and she visibly cringes as your eyes meet once more. "That's all. R-really."

How do you react?

Ok. Our eyes are glowing. Did they always do that, or is this a new thing?

Might be a sign that the GW corruption has advanced further. I think Deculture mentioned that the Siberia procedure did not give total protection afterall.

Then again, we have only really talked to the three stooges recently, and Deculture also said that the DEagle corrupts us least since its our personal GW. So maybe the glowing eyes are a result of the torture Pinky did to us during the timestop?

Kind of. She is one of our aids and our girlfriend. Probably one of the few people we can trust, though that does not mean they will always act in ways we view favorably (such as the wendy kiss).

Maybe this is too important for her but... well, we will see. I have a feeling it has something to do with grief seeds which could be big but not too horribly huge probably.

Anon has it mostly right but there's also a few other factors at play here slmd being trust and another need to know/going to know. We talked before about involving Midori more since she's one of the few persons that Chiaki can trust and, on top of that, she has a convenient metaphorical leash on. More than that, although she can sometimes be impulsive, she has shown good insight. That aside, while the meeting is secret, it was never stated that it was "Warmaster only". If it's too sensitive a subject, we can always have her wait a few steps away, it's no big deal. Then again, AR that point it's going to break into need to know/going to know again.

All that said, someone post Maullar's Kumatora.

Infact, we should ask what the three stooges know about the GW corruption in general and what other symptoms we should look out for. And whether or not the glowing eyes are a serious concern or just cosmetic issue.

Deculture also mentioned that the bonus we can acquire from Murderface of the three stooges has something to do with increased resistance to GW corruption. So Murderface probably knows quite a bit.

I hope we get to have a full conversation with the three of them soon. Theres lots of things we have to say and ask. Heck, we havent even apologized to Braids yet.

This.

I don't really waifu in general (more of a comradu-ing guy, if that even exists) and if I did I would go for Wendy, but I think Midori should be something other than the shy timid girl that follows us around and calls us sempai all the time. This seems like a good step in that direction.

It feels like Kyuubey is not going to be happy if we insist on Midori coming along.

You glare at your own surroundings, peering into the shadows lurking around the corridor, daring for any one of them to take on the shape of your ex. At the same time, you manifest the stable form of your Soul Gem onto the upturned palm of your right hand, the spiked bauble glowing in preparation to detect any sneaky Callidus - also in the shape of your ex.

"Sempai?" Midori's eyes go wide at the appearance of your Soul Gem. "I...i-is it supposed to look like that? I don't remember Sempai's looking like that--"

You silence her with a sharp hiss and a glare, before holding out the glowing jewel. Focusing on your attunement to the Callidus beside you to check if there were, in fact any other Callidus lurking about.

"I know you're out here, Wendy," You call into the corridor, stepping forward, the hand holding your Soul Gem outsretched in front of you. "I'm not going to be fucking stalked in my own building. Show yourself."

Nothing from your SOul Gem, either. Not even a half-hearted throb, or the dimmest glimmer of light.

+ I didn't...sense anyone else, if that's what you're wondering. + The voice usually crisp and cutting with unfeigned self-importance hisses in your mind in a tired whisper. + Only her. +

You put your Soul Gem away, and turn back to a visibly-exhausted Midori. Her cheeks pink with exertion, as if she'd been doing something really strenuous.

"Y-yes, sempai?" She manages to catch her breath long enough to speak. You raise an eyebrow at this - but you simply shake your head, and then tell her to go back to the assembly hall and wait for you there. Where you're going seems to be a Warmaster access-only thing, so she can't stick around. You'll have that talk with her after all this, back at the apartment.

"Al...alright, sempai." Midori's shoulders droop even as her chest heaves in her effort to get air back into her lungs. "I'm...I'm sorry. I just wanted to make sure sempai was okay."

How do you react?

[]Reassure her. "...I'll be fine. It's probably just some super-secret document I need to sign or something."
[]Nod once, and then walk into Kyuubey's office without another word. She needs to learn.

If she didn't start the time loop, Madoka would have died to walpurgisnacht and Magical Girls would have continued to turn into Witches!

She was the one who let it all happen!

The problem is we keep half-heartedly involving Midori. We take her to meetings and then leave her behind when it gets intense. Or she follows us around and then we tell her to go away.

To be fair, this is a bad case to consider. We would turn away anyone else in the cast at this point, too.

In general, Midori's skillset just doesn't work well with ours. We're a very in-your-face frontline fighter, and she's not. Therefore she doesn't go on many combat missions with us.

Anyone who says she's only eyecandy obviously came in after Siberia arc, though.

The problem is that we're dealing with one week waits between threads (it's easy to forget minute details) and we have an unstable population (people voting to bring her then others voting to send her away). Really, there's not much to be done other than talking things through civilly and hoping you can come to a halfway point. Like I said, I'm a little sad that even after two years we still haven't been able to bring Midori up to speed or have her work with Chiaki as a team. But there's only so much you can do when threads occur once, maybe twice, a week, I guess.

You look at Midori's downcast face, before pulling your greatcoat tighter around you. ...You'll be fine, you reassure her. With your luck, it's probably some super-secret document you need to sign with your own blood as ink, or something. Nothing so exciting or dangerous that she needs to worry. And if it's Wendy she's concerned about, well - you're pretty sure she's not around to do anything crazy, either.

The green-haired Midori nods silently at this, her head still bowed as she starts to make her way back down the corridor. You let out a sigh, and make to call out her name, to make sure that she's not beating herself up too much over this - but she beats you to the punch, turning on her heel and running back towards you. Catching you in a very sudden and very brief hug that presses your face against a certain soft and warm part of her anatomy.

Before you can even squirm or squeak in protest, she'd already disengaged, running away, her footsteps bouncing off the corridor walls in a hurried stacatto.

Leaving you with your own cheeks slightly red at the outburst of intimate physical contact - something that you're still getting used to, even after the night you shared.

...At least that's settled, you think to yourself, as you turn to face the huge double doors leading to Kyuubey's office. Now at least you can deal with whatever Kyuubey and Vintage wants to show you - something that's apparently so fucking important that they needed to hire an idol for a smokescreen.

Taking a deep breath, you push through the doors and step into the room, over the threshold. The doors immediately slamming shut behind you, locks clicking and sliding into place.

The sight that greets you is Kyuubey's Office. Unchanged from how you saw it last. The cat tower in the corner. The blindingly-white walls and floors, which you've discovered to actually be screens in and of themselves, able to project and display images that Kyuubey needed to show. The Incubator himself is at his desk, in front of his computer and the array of monitors facing him.

...Nothing too weird. Huh. Maybe it IS going to be that super-secret paperwork you'll need to look over. That's a bit disappointing.

Looking around, you find Vintage off to the side, surreptitiously sipping from what looks like a silver hip flask. And looking at the grimace twisting her face after every sip, it looks like she's dealing with some very strong stuff.

"Oh! Warmaster!" Vintage starts as she notices you staring at her - and the flask immediately disappears into a kimono sleeve, quick enough that for a moment you wonder if there was any flask at all. "How did it go? Everything settled, I hope?"

How do you respond?

Why can't a callidus be trained to help on the front lines? (I mean, look at Wendy) Wetwork, Powerful Callidus illusions (which Midori has a talent for), and her bond with Chiaki make her a unique asset.

It's still not very clear what we can do with that besides callidus check, I'm not sure if Decu confirmed if seeing through her eyes or ASSUMING DIRECT CONTROL to make shots for her was a viable thing.

Every word I write in my threads is driven by a desire to do better than Dec. I'll probably never be as good as his early stuff, but I'll be damned if I don't outshine this modern endlessly bogged down by wafiu arguments stuff.

That said, the story's still good when read in archived chunks - the threads are just frustrating to be in.

Not that I think it's shit, but it's not as engaging as it used to be on average, and being candid with Decu is better when the alternative is a hugbox echo chamber.

We did. But we did the Soulgem test. If there's any Callidus other than Midori nearby, they're good enough to avoid our one simple means of checking for their presence.

So either we start poking into every shadow, or we proceed assuming that we probably are being followed by someone and say "fuck it."

Wendy probably just went to the toilet or something.

Don't mistake subtle for incompetent.

She's a competent magical girl. But in the Ninth, that places her somewhere in the bottom half of the list of "combat effective" Meguca.

BUT, it needs to be noted that not every mission is a combat mission, and when all you have is a hammer-space shield filled with ordanance, every problem starts to look like a nail.

Diversity of opinion and skills is important, so in that sense Midori fills an important role of "sanity check".

Mostly I didn't want to end up running off with a thousand different narrators, but in the end it meant a lot of characters only got a little screen time in Wendy's flashback stuff. I do intend to go into more depth with what they're doing presently, but I was planning on waiting until the Church was more in the spotlight for that. You nod. Everything's settled, yeah. As far as you know, anyway.

"Good to hear it, absolutely!" There's a bit of a slur in Vintage's words, now, not that noticeable but easily spotted if you knew what to listen for. Either the stuff she was hitting on the sly was really strong stuff, or she was a lightweight through and through. You've got money on the former, at least. "Always work things out face to face whenever you can, Warmaster, that's the most important thing I can teach you. Well, the second most important thing, anyway!"

...What's the first most important thing, then?

"'Around girls with green hair, always beware!'" The Equerry of the First giggles, before holding a hand to her head, hissing in pain. "...Dear me. Sorry. I thought you were going to take a while, and...well, I found my own entertainment for a bit."

Huh. That's what they call it way up there in the moon, then? Classy.

Well, anyway. You still have a party to scowl and grumble through, so you'd like to get on with it.

"Right, right! Of course!" Vintage nods, wincing again, before leading the way to the center of the room - where Kyuubey busied himself on his computer, multiple screeds of information scrolling through the screens. "Warmaster's here, Kyuubey, and ready for her super-secret briefing."

"Very well." Kyuubey nods. "I'll start the projection momentarily. Please wait until then, Karasawa, Matsuda."

Vintage nods, before turning away slightly to massage her temple, her face an irritated mask of migraine-pain. "Devil's Moonshine is right. Urgh, and to think she drinks THIS every day..."

Silence. Awkward silence, broken only by the rapid machine-gun fire clicks of Kyuubey's ear-appendages typing on his keyboard. It's...a disturbing sight at best.

You turn towards Vintage, the Equerry still suffering from what looks like the fastest hangover in existence - and you whisper what you wanted to say to her as you slide up beside her slight, shorter frame. That she didn't need to hide her boozing, and how you think that everyone needs a drink every now and then.

"O-oh. You saw?" Vintage looks guiltily at you. "It's...well. Another reflex, from staying so long up there." She shakes her head. "Alcohol's not exactly welcome in the moonbase. Forbidden, actually, just like red meat."

...What? Not only alcohol, but red meat, too? How--

"The Warmaster believes in a very strict and a very clean diet. Absolute purity, inside and out." The venom in Vintage's voice could have poisoned an entire continent. "Of course, whatever her diet is, the rest of us needs to follow, too."

...So, she's--

"Vegan. Yes." Vintage shakes her head, before massaging her temple again. "Let's...not talk about it."

Right.

Fuck. You had an idea that the Warmaster of the First was going to be something else, but not like this.

Before you could needle Vintage for more details, however, it's here that the room turns dark - the only light now coming from the screens of Kyuubey's computer. After another moment, those flicker out of existence, too - and you blink in the complete pitch-black darkness as you hear Kyuubey's voice beside you.

What won't take long? What the fuck is this--

You're cut off here, as light blooms underneath you - and you look down to see a circle of blue light etching itself on the floor under your feet. Surrounding you in its perimeter. A beep, and letters flash into existence onto the curve of the circle, making up your name and your rank. "OCCUPANT IDENTIFIED. CHIAKI MATSUDA, WARMASTER OF THE NINTH OFFICIO ASSASSINORUM." A voice speaks out in the room. "VERIFIED FOR ALPHA CLEARANCE."

Another beep, another robotic declaration. "OCCUPANT IDENTIFIED. THE NINTH, INCUBATOR OF THE NINTH OFFICIO ASSSASSINORUM. VERIFIED FOR OMEGA CLEARANCE."

One final beep. One final announcement. "OCCUPANT IDENTIFIED. SEVATAR, FORMER WARMASTER OF THE NINTH AND CURRENT EQUERRY OF THE FIRST OFFICIO ASSASSINORUM. VERIFIED FOR ALPHA CLEARANCE."

And it's here that a giant globe - one made out of pure light, with all the continents shaped and teeming with color - drops down from the ceiling. A hologram of the world, projected from above, a simulation of a planet looking real enough to touch. Another globe manifests beside this, a smaller one that orbits around the first - the moon, complete with a pimple of a moonbase and the malignant tumor of a Witch's gigantic spiked grief-seed attached to its dark side.

You notice immediately that the moon - and some of the continents on the slowly-turning globe - are marked with crimson shapes, each one irregularly shaped. Each one glowing with the same malevolent red that your pupils had, earlier.

"Still the same old codename, Kyuubey?" Vintage calls out. "That's sentimental of you."

"I thought I updated it, actually. But perhaps I didn't manage to, in time." Kyuubey returns. "But nevertheless, Matsuda, this is why we brought you here." He nods to the globe. "See those areas on the globe marked with red?"

"The most well-kept secret in our business," Vintage smiles. "The Akashic Points. Portals to the Akashic Realm, where gods and mortals meet."

The biggest of them is somewhere in Europe. Britain, it looks like.

It has a name, unlike the rest.

'Ocularis Terribus'.

This is definitely not something that Midori needs to know yet. I don't see any problem with my previous vote (the feature of bringing her along would have been nice and she could have simply waited outside), but now that it's been established as above her clearance level, well, she'll just have to deal.

There are other important things that we really, really need to talk to her about though, and I hope we get around to them soon.

You glare at the globe for a few moments, before sticking a fresh cigarette in your mouth. Your previous one having burned to ashes a while ago.

Flicking your zippo open and sparking it to life, you light the stick of nicotine, the flame of the lighter making the half-lit darkness around you dirty with shadows. Shadows that overlapped your own, and for the briefest of moments, made you look as if you had wings.

The Twelfth Incubator's Office is positioned at a surprising place - in one of the National Theatre's loges. The Archive was rebuilt just under it, so we can simply take a lift from there. Our Incubator has always boasted being something of an anthropologist, and since we were moving everything years ago, he used the opportunity to enjoy music arts during work, and focus on our culture more.

When I've entered the office, he was doing something with the computer alright, but through the one-way glass, I could also see the actors on the stage rehearsing something, repeating lines, occasionally starting a song, but never getting past a few verses before the director would yell at them.

"This is a good example of how narrow human perception is, Jarmila." He responded to my silence, not caring to face me, but using my given name as always. It definitely leaves a sense of pretense. "The play is quite interesting, and could provide, to the more curious viewer, a gateway into a whole new unique theatre genre. But, as it often happens, all you humans remember is the title song. The need to translate it also obscures much of the meaning here."

On a wagon, bound for market
there's a calf with a mournful eye;
High above him, there's a swallow
winging swiftly through the sky;
How the winds are laughing,
they laugh with all their might;
Laugh and laugh the whole day through and half the summer's night.

"It's also quite fitting to our cause, what do you think?" Was he gloating about how he's got us under his thumb?

I did know both the song and this cattle allegory. It especially starts making sense once you spend enough time in the Twelfth, and understand that under all those esoterics and difficult words, there's really just a huge slaughterhouse of the Witch flesh. You get good or go Witch. I know the Twelfth is special in this way, but don't see into the exact methods of this being handled, except for having to purge what's left of the newbies all the time. Grief must flow, or so the cat says.

But now that I thought of it, does participating in it all make me a cow?

"I don't understand art, sir. I came to give you report on Barbara, as obvious. She wasn't a cow or a swallow. I guess she was a bitch to kill."

"Make sure to pass the story of your heroic prevailing to one of the Gatherers. More importantly, how many causalities did you have?" Damn cat kept watching his screen, like I was the pet in this room. He looks so silly, I keep forgetting all the jokes are lost on this guy. He may be good at mimicry and has got a definite talent for ad-libs, but under his act is a mask of cold steel.

"Only one squaddie girl had died, and no expensive wounds were sustained." Well, the one I got from having to the Mach Lunge hurts, but won't send the limb to Jackdaw's ice box just yet.

"I've noticed that your arm-"

"Though wait, damn, actually, sorry. Two girls are dead. That's why I came late. Jackdaw should already have gotten both the bodies a hour ago or so - we sent them in advance."

"How rude. Don't jump into your boss's speech like that. And don't make this kind of a mistake when reporting." Wiggle, wiggle. If only you could make a key charm out of that tail.

"I am sorry. The Info-Cyte girl had witched out."

His tail slowed down to a still, with a very controlled movement. "That is... actually very interesting, Jarmila. From the Info-Cyte's maker, I hear that was out of the question. You should talk to her, it's Renata Lichtenberg, the Librarian with synthetic arms. Our main hacker, formerly of Fourth." An incubator using given names and nicknames is also odd, girls who transferred here say that a lot. "I'll go over your account of her later, assuming you didn't let her get away. Renata will need it as soon as possible, though."

I've seen that one with metal arms a bunch of times. Obviously she would be a transferee from the Fourth, but. "Was that girl really ranked?"

"The thing to consider here is," he kept going on, "Figuring out how much corruption could mechanization of thought save on somebody other than herself was one of the experiment's purposes." The ugly mascot had finally moved, and, for once, his step seemed oddly unsure.

"This is a very strange situation we may have gotten here, mhmm. I understand that you are quite the ideologically driven person. You should be glad, because today is a very special day - you will get to discuss ideology." He turned his head slowly towards me, in a way that shouldn't be possible for any animal with a spinal column. That actually had more shock value than whatever turn scare setup he could have had planned to try out, what with delaying eye contact.

"Well then, Jarmila. Are you familiar with the Riddle of Witch Flesh?

I've resisted the urge to scratch my head here. The Riddle of Witch Flesh? Don't care about these occasional heated debates the Vanus have, but they really wouldn't shut up about this one. "Isn't it basically asking what's the right amount of emotion in life, and how to tell?"

"Yes, that. You know, it's not just sophistry, it's a matter of life and death for you girls. Panna wants to talk to you today, among other people. And discuss this riddle. So, that's another thing you have to do today. She said she would come at the Archive's reception, and that the other Rank Leaders have already been notified."

"Well, it's where they both live. That's... okay by me. I've wanted to stop by there anyway. Drink some beer with them and complain about my day." I couldn't help being kind of blunt, compared to his curly speech

"I know you have just done a lot of work, but this is really important, and she's adamant that she must talk to all of you Rank Leaders together today. You'd better go. Seeds go to the Librarium, I can't take these just yet." He turned back, apparently considering me dismissed.

"I'll be going then, sir. I've told Popelka to report to you in person. She would understand how Squad Libra had performed better than I do."

And so I've left the cat to his own thoughts, which were, in all likelihood, him plotting to screw us all over with the least effort. Like a twisted child that mechanically plays with its toys because that's what they are for, but never has fun. A toy breaking doesn't even make it flinch.

Or like a farmer who grooms his animals and plays with them for years on the end before having to butcher them, because that was the point all along. He doesn't enjoy the act of betrayal and killing. Happy meat just sells the best.

Such is the painful truth. He doesn't really care about humans at all.

Following the familiar branch of tubes out of the Elevator, I've arrived to the Archive's gate, and the booth built into the wall next to it. Anyone who would happen to wander this deep would be put off by the single led light illuminating a massive steel door.

That is, if they could see it. Which they would most likely not, because the girl standing guard next to the gate would usually either be a Callidus trainee maintaining the Rank Leader's double illusion of seeing darkness along with a touching a stone wall, or the Rank Leader herself. For a third of a day, though, and as was the case when I came there, the Vindicare Rank Leader would sit at the booth instead

Martina, who should, by all rights, have seen them coming from a hundred meters away and could make precautions. Provided she actually physically looked where she was supposed to, which no guard really does. Nothing bad ever came out of it, though. I could actually see the light when I've turned corner, so it must have been her shift.

"Papers please - oh yeah, figured the huge person there was you." The booth girl's voice had skipped a whole octave, to accompany the shift of her social gears from seeing a friend. She had her blindfold pulled over hair, with one hand remaining on it like she wasn't sure which way to pull it, making her look like a scatterbrain. That was precious, because it was far from the truth.

Since it seemed a bit like I've caught her reading porn mags on the job or something, I've decided to tease her a bit more on it. "Won't you still have to probe me with clairvoyance, though? What if I am a Callidus? I guess this looks like a bunch of halves in a bag to you, but it's totally a bomb or some shit."

"Oh, you're okay. Still saw you with one eye. It's the only way I can do something else on the boredom shift." That sounds like it must make her head hurt, though. She had already hidden whatever she was reading under the desk, it really must have been something disgraceful. "You've got magic on your hand, though, did somebody wreck you? My day was shit too."

This already seemed like a beginning of a good, long dudebrochick talk, one of those that will take hours, but in which we won't actually say anything we haven't said before. So, let me tell you about Martina for a bit, instead of showing, since the way this had happened doesn't show her off enough.

In order to be granted the title and rank "Librarian of the Twelfth", a magical girl has to meet a set of requirements:

To be resourceful, knowledgeable, and experienced with both inner mechanisms of the Officio and the groundwork, able to fill different roles than just those usually expected of a Vanus: She must have some at least basic combat training and skill, and deep understanding of magic arts, along with the ability to widely apply them to most problems. Martina can do some crazy things with her magic, and both kill and fix problems like nobody's business.

And lastly, to prove with a clean track record that she is worthy of trust, disciplined, and in general fit to become the Incubator's confidant in some manner, dusting off one of the Officio's closet skeletons, never telling anyone what she came to know. As I understand it, this is where it breaks, because Martina is not dependable enough. Her results are too wall-to-wall to handle the subjects that Juunibey needs clean and safe.

But, much like me, she does pretty good when you leave her to do her own thing.

That's why, after she had beaten on Liliana's skin with two Grief Seed's worth of enchanted sticks and stones, even if it had little effect and even if she had needed a flying friends help to accomplish it, Juunibey didn't have her replace one of the dead Librarians, but rather the Vindicare Rank Leader, who got gulped down like a chump.

We're similar people, in that we're both thick headed and hard to put a leash on, but also the strongest around. I'll repeat that I never felt like a leader, but Martina apparently does, and says that both prodigies and leaders must be selfish, else they'll never get anywhere. I've got some real issues with her personality, but due to circumstance, she's the closest thing to a friend I've got.

Well, we're friends now, but Martina is a very inconvenient person at first. You will find that she's such a massive pile of issues, it almost makes her seem capricious and many-faced when you get closer to her, because you can never tell what she's projecting at right now. Through her concealed misanthropy, and constant trying to weed her own banes out of others, she gets her job of a Vindicare Rank Leader done.

Panna says she's just histrionic, that I am a jock, and Toy is too soft for our trade, but that's because Panna always has to be a complete cunt to everyone.

I fell on the sofa in that tiny crib, having seen the bed already occupied by Toy, who must have come earlier and tried to catch a nap before the meeting. "Seriously. That fucking cat. If I see that fucking cat try to turn scare me one more time."

Martina immediately gave me the mirror of reason that I've needed, twisted as it was. "He's trying, though. Isn't that worthy of respect? Like, keep in mind this, he must have been at it for eighty years. That's amazing. You've got to respect that, you've got to."

"...It's amazingly stupid of him, if that's what you're getting at. At least it wasn't the fake laughter. That was horrible, god damn."

They don't -and aren't allowed to- keep a bottle opener around for me, so I've always had to conjure up a tiny metal spike and use it to open the bottle cap, which was kind of wasteful. It's always the annoying routines like this that really get to you. I also have to carry my bottles back with me, but Toyen still has it worse, since she can't smoke underground. It also seems to disgust the Vanus when she brings it up, since the Officio spaces are always kept so sterile. You would think that they wouldn't mind, since they so often pretend that shit doesn't stink.

"Sure, but. If my laptop had worked for eighty years, that would be an amazing laptop. Say it runs one of these programs where it tries to learn to speak by talking to you. Except, if you talk to it for eighty years, who cares if the conversational program on it passes the Turing test yet. You grow so attached to it, you even start talking like it, there's no difference anymore."

That was a new thought right there. It had me thinking about it for a while. "Is that like what happened to Panna? Did she talk to an Incubator for so long that she forgot he's fucked up, and became like him? Started seeing the world through the beady eyes?"

"You can ask her herself in a short while.", she turned again. "That reminds me, Toy, I am going to need the bed. Panna insists that since I used to be a Vanus, she wants me to give my account in trance."

Hearing her name called out, the second resident of the booth came to her senses, and sat on the bed's edge. "Sorry. Fell asleep waiting." Then, her mind caught up, and she gave Martina a long, tired stare through her sleepy eyes. "Like, in trance? Vanus trance, like they do in rituals? Like when Řeřicha gets high? So that you can't lie or backtrack on what you've said? What a bitch."

Martina must have been overjoyed, being able to correct somebody that hard.

"Right, except none of what you've said is a given. It differs by person. Like, it usually allows you to focus more on whatever you are doing in the Administratum. Scryers or seers are usually unconscious during it, but enhance their results like this. They get more worked up. Gatherer candidates would stay conscious and focus on digging in their memory, so they can remember what you've said better, and add notes to the account, down to subtle stuff like the faces you were making. My version is that too. And since the blindfold already allows me to see EVERYTHING down to the pimples on their butt and junk food in their stomach, and you can only do so much sparring, I've tried to push the trance a bit as well, when I was bored."

Married to the job alright. Dirudo, was it? But I have no right to poke fun at her here, since I like to abuse the Eversor trance too.

She held her head in her hands now, staring outside. "It took years, but when I focus these days, I basically get photographic memory of everything I've seen lately. So, the Gatherers really like me now, is what I am getting at." she made a short pause, probably realizing that wasn't what she had originally wanted to say. "Besides, it's not like I would lie to Panna now. It's the opposite - I want to throw the whole thing in her face. Because it's all her fault."

I took a swig from the flask. My sincere pity goes to all the poor foreign workaholic magical girls who will never taste bottled bohemian beer after work. "Was it so bad? I mean, sure, retirement missions suck, glad to have them off my back, but still. Don't you do a lot of those?"

"Let me think about that. Hm. Yeah, I do, but no, you're wrong. You can't actually get used to everything. I am not even really a cynic, or fucking Yossarian like Toyen. I have to look into their faces, you know." Martina seemed to struggle with the proper volume to give her voice, like when you're talking to a driver. She wanted us to hear her, without turning back, but also didn't want anyone possibly passing the Archive's gate to hear, since the conversation was straying in a classified direction.

Well, I could take that burden by talking myself, for a while. "Yeah, and get this: I have to look into their heads, and take a trip through their pocket personal hell. How's that not worse?"

That may be when they've also noticed how I've been starting to slip a bit.

"I also keep count, you know? I've seen thirteen hundred and forty Barriers within five years of service, give or take ten. Some of them don't really count, or I only got a glimpse or something." I've lowered my voice a bit too. "Anyway, that's a Witch almost every day. It also means I've purged an entire Officio in my life, or the Twelfth almost twice over. For the record, I normally use three Seeds a month, since I've got a lot of juice and just smash most of them down with a weapon. You'd think that it eventually gets old, like that all girls would mostly think about wanting to have a dick and that the Barriers would have that. Like that psychologist who wanted to fuck his mom, Freud. That kind of a thing. But no. Still new and new exciting silly shit coming my way."

"Anyway, I actually think that this keeps me sane. If they started repeating and I felt like I've figured people out, that would drive me crazy. So, I get what you're saying. I don't mind answering the question either, and my answer is also no. I don't just fire and forget. Hehe, no pun intended."

Martina was trying to keep her eyes on outside of the booth, but still shot me a look over the shoulder. "That's some strange math. You do realize the problems with it, right?"

"Yeah. The coolest part about it is that I didn't even kill half the Witches we've produced in that time. Not even fucking close. Not even a quarter of them. A tenth, more like. It's sort of hard to not figure out the... You know. The thing."

Toyen seemed already woken up by us talking things of that sort, so she asked Martina the good question. "Is this going to be about the thing?"

"Pretty sure it's going to be about the thing. It was real crazy and weird. And it's not like this was my first time doing this. Panna has to do the gatherer's role herself because nobody else is really allowed to, well, even hear it. Except you, today, finally. For some reason."

Clearly, this mission she had ben on must have been super bad. Worse than murdering your friends and telling your friends about it, which is what a retirement mission normally entails.

So, when she came, there wasn't much small talk. It was obviously the first thing we had to ask. Why is this so important?

"Because this time, I happen to be dying."

There was a hint of amusement in her voice, being able to tell this to the three people in the world who had probably wanted to murder her the most.

"...After Jarmila left the garden in the morning, I had my soul gem faint on me. This body underwent clinical death for a few minutes, and wouldn't move when I came to." She waved her palm around, like when you're trying to get the itch out of it in the morning.

"I won't humor you with stories of what it's like to be old. But this means I could basically leave you any moment now. I probably won't, but it could happen. In theory."

Martina showed the most empathy of us all, actually having something to ask after a long pause. "So, this is because you've still got unfinished business. No last will, you're basically passing the Officio on right now."

"Exactly."

"Why us? Why not pick a Chief Librarian - or, hell, another Warmaster's Aide like you - and have her just keep doing what you did? Didn't the cat have you make, like, hectoliters of the Potion for future use?"

Panna tapped her knuckles on the table, and laid her shades on it, maybe to indicate that she's finally being level with us. "The problem with that is that I can't really recommend the Incubator any of the Librarians or my Venenum in good conscience. Jackdaw and Řeřicha have what it takes, if we are talking skill, but neither is a leader. They also are too talented, if you know what I mean by that. They lack the versatility. And perspective. And let's be honest, neither has much common sense."

While the Aide was moving her chair to the back of the crib next to the bed, where Martina had already lied, Toyen had to sit by the table too. While she could, she said the thing on everyone's mind. "Don't get angry, Panna, but you're pretty batshit crazy yourself."

Didn't even twitch her brow. She didn't even insult anyone so far, so it really seemed like a grave matter. "Just listen for a while. After you hear Martina's story from this morning, it will all make much more sense."

And then the session was all ready, started, and Martina would start saying all those interesting things. I should get the account itself from Umika, and stick it under this. By now, at least that's going to be easy.

Dead Neptune
:Chapter 01:

At the bow of the Tacoma, Alice leaned on the railings. The sea churned and divided before her, the wind blowing through her outfit and tossing up her auburn hair, her blonde highlights accentuating her wavy, slightly curly hair.

Three ships trailed behind, each flying the flag of a blue pearl with a trident and a soul gem. The first two vessels following were the cruisers Ticonderoga and Yorktown, and the ship bringing up the rear was the destroyer Chandler. The battlecruiser up front waved the same flag, sailing to a particular island somewhere between Japan and Australia.

This was no Officio. None of that bureaucracy bullshit. Officially, they'd be written down as renegades, magical girls gone rogue. These particular rebels, however, liked to call themselves Dead Neptune.

That said, rogue magical girls were usually hunted down and killed to prevent any kind of mass killings or heists. Dead Neptune spent most of its time lying low, avoiding raising any eyebrows of the Officios around the world. They usually took mercenary assignments, taking jobs as guns for hire. Sometimes it'd be shooting shit out of the water, other times it was to defend a hill from a battalion of soldiers.

Living at sea wasn't too hard. After the usual necessary assimilation to the sea, some girls decided that living on water wasn't too bad. Though there were expectations, the atmosphere aboard the four ships was more relaxed than in any office building. More casual. Doctrines differed, too, nullifying the disasters of Eversors being pinned down by a single sniper or Vindicares locked in a room with a blade.

Life at sea also meant girls hailing from all over the world. Those unhappy with their incubator or just wanting to get away would work their way through hoops and up ladders, eventually finding themselves part of the organization.

The sky melted into an ominous grey. A short, cute chime brought Alice back to earth, her attention shifting downwards. Fishing her phone out of her pocket, the screen lit up and displayed a few lines of text. It was from Jessica.

>Hey Alice!~
>Come up top!
>Witch in the water!
>Maybe!
>(￣。￣)y-~~

A breath escaped her lips. The Warmaster was usually like this. Playful, energetic. Some people thought she was too much so. Some think it's a mystery how she manages to hold the whole organization together so well, even more so if Jessica was even the same person when she was serious or angry. Her body language seemed to change at the drop of a hat.

Stowing her phone, Alice paused, taking one more look at the sea before heading inside. Even though dealing with Jess could get tough, at least she was enthusiastic about doing most of what paperwork. Or most of what paperwork there was.

She stepped away from the railing and strode past the the two triple gun turrets, heading into the base of the tower of the Alaska-class. Navigating through the halls, she was greeted with everything from nods to casual salutes, all gestures accompanied by a smile. She returned the greetings with a nod, steadily moving towards the observation deck.

She leisurely opened the door, spotting a brown haired girl patrolling the windows with a set of binoculars wrapped in her bandaged hands. The brown haired girl acknowledged Alice with a small wave as she came in, breaking her stern stare with a smile for only just a moment.

Alice tepidly joined Jessica. "Scanners're pickin' up Witch sigs. Everyone's already on alert. We think it's gonna show up portside. Ninety-nine percent chance." Her stare remained unbroken, peering through the glass frequently.

"So why'd you call me up here?" Leaning back against the panel of electronics, Alice started messing with a paperclip, trying to fix it into any shape that it'd submit to.

"Just to have my trusty Equerry with me in case shit hits the fan."

"Mmm."

The four ships continued journeying to the island, swaying gently as the waves pushed against their sides. Silence was heard aboard the Tacoma's observation deck, save for the beeping of computers and clicking of buttons.

An unnaturally large ripple began to surface, a depression in the sea starting to become visible. The ground shook. Sirens blared and guns turned portside, followed by the buzzing over the intercom.

"WITCH ATTACK IMMINENT. PORTSIDE, 3500 METERS. THIS IS NOT A DRILL. REPEAT. WITCH ATTACK IMMINENT. PORTSIDE, 3500 METERS. THIS IS NOT A DRILL."

The Warmaster was already moving. Jessica immediately started barking orders to the crew, followed by nods and a chorus of reports replying to her. Alice, on the other hand, stayed put, fiddling with the morphing paperclip held in place by her dexterous fingers.

The sea collapsed into the depression and exploded. A serpent-like form rose from the water, roaring to life. Immediately, the guns of the Tacoma and the cannons of the other ships unloaded, striking the witch with a barrage of explosions.

MAGICAL GIRL NOIR QUEST
THE FALL OF CHIAKI MATSUDA

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 09/27/14(Sat)09:28:52 No.35148894 Archived

You are a Magical Girl, and you've had a hell of a night.

A night that you're still struggling to wake up from, with the familiar heaviness of your entire body unwilling to cooperate after your sinful excesses a full eight hours ago. It's worn you out enough that you couldn't even lift your personal Callidus' arms off of you, both of them still locked around your waist in a possessive clasp. Like a child unwilling to let go of a precious stuffed animal.

You need a bath, you grumble to yourself as you take stock of your surroundings - your quarters, in the Ninth Officio Assassinorum Headquarters, seeing as you were in absolutely no shape to drive yourself home last night. No one else was. Not after your ratification after-party, which Kyoko herself had personally overseen.

There were drinks.

...There were a lot of drinks.

And a lot of celebrating, with your entire Officio seemingly and ridiculously pleased at your promotion.

You weren't THAT pleased, not with what you've learned that night - but even Kyoko's enthusiasm had always been infectious. She could have made a corpse get carried away and rot even faster. She even got you to sing, an act that you'll never be able to live down unless you kill everyone who witnessed it. Mami was quick to dissuade you from that temptation, of course.

>>35148894

Warmaster. It's official now. As official as the hat that you'd grown accustomed into wearing over your head, its ill-fitting clasp around the perimeter of your scalp more a comfort now than something irritating. As real as the greatcoat you've grown accustomed to draping over your shoulders, pulling it close around you when it felt too cold for comfort. As honest as your chosen symbol - a shattered amethyst star bordered by the rifling of a gun barrel, replacing the winged skull Imperialis that Kharn had taken as her own.

And as damning as the truths you learned, from a former Warmaster now on her way back to the Moon, the furry white bastard you call your boss, and the green-haired Callidus that you've taken for your own.

You need a bath, you find yourself murmuring again. A bath and a drink. And probably another drink after that, to blunten the hangover pressing its spikes against the insides of your skull.

After a few painful moments of extracting yourself from the girl in your bed, you set out to get both those things. ...Not at the same time, of course, but not because it made sense. No, it was simply because you've done it before, and all you did was water down whisky that you sorely needed to wash down a mouthful of painkillers with. Painkillers, because the pain in your body hurt so much that it wouldn't even allow you to fall unconscious.

The bath takes you half an hour, with the usual calls of nature responded to and the rituals of hygiene Mami had taught you attended to. With your ponytail firmly tied and your costume still tingling with the static charge of being freshly manifested onto your form, you walk to your Office and sit down on your desk. You note with a sigh of relief at the empty surface of your desk, bereft of paperwork whatsoever.

>>35148899

Even Mami must be taking it easy this morning - you dimly remember her going toe-to-toe with Takane in a singing contest, each one clasping a microphone in one hand and a full stein of draft beer in the other. The contest was to keep singing the lyrics right as you progressively got drunker - and whoever stuttered or mis-sang a verse lost.

All the better for you, then. You need a breather from paperwork as it is, what with having much more important things to worry about. ...You're talking about what you learned last night, of course. From Vintage, from Kyuubey, and from Midori.

And you wrote it all down in your journal, so you wouldn't forget.

Draining your glass of whisky, you pull out the slim black book and place it in front of you, before opening it to the part where you started jotting down notes last night. The words 'Akashic Realm' scribbled on the very top of the page, with the c written after you crossed out an errant 't' in its place. You note here that you've written...quite a bit about it. Quite a handful of pages, in fact.

In contrast, the parts you wrote about what Midori told you are...depressingly short. But they tell you what she knows, and what you wanted to know.

Which one do you want to read first?

[]Your notes about the Akashic Realm.

Siberia seems like the likely answer. Seems like Chiaki and Midori finally had that talk, although I wonder if we also told her about the Clara Dolls and other stuff that we needed to swap notes on. It would seem, at least, that Midori wasn't berated for complicating things with Wendy during a business meeting yet.

The point of write ups isn't that they can't do stuff that isn't going to be important in the main thread: The point is that any information we need to make an informed decision turns up in the thread making the writeups of secondary importance.

I think that's still on the to-do list. It was supposed to happen "yesterday" but Sayaka canceled in favor of having us meet with Wendy, then resucing Misaka happened, then the ratification.

It got pushed back, basically.

You decide to read your notes about the Akashic Realm first. ...Yeah, might as well get it out of the way first, while things are still quiet and everyone's nursing their hangovers. Least chance of people barging in unnannounced and interrupting you.

Taking a sip from your glass - letting out a sigh of contentment as the alcohol begins to dull the edge of the morning once more - it's here that you pore through your own hurried handwriting. Remembering how Vintage and Kyuubey explained it to you, with the glowing holographic simulation of a globe hovering in the middle of the room.

"We're not quite sure what the Akashic Realm actually is." Vintage's admission was curt, frank, and delivered with an uncharacteristic lack of a smile.

"When the First - honors unto his name - discovered it with the very first Magical Girls he contracted, then called Fox Brides, they thought they'd found a portal to Hell. A dimension of pure agony and despair, of pain and torment, where those who sinned enough to fall from divine grace would spend eternity screaming." The former Warmaster smiled then, but the smile was a cold and bleak thing. "It would've been the best-case scenario, in my opinion."

You're not so sure you disagree. It wasn't hell, but it was something very close to it, from what expeditionary parties of both Magical Girls and mundane folk found out.

The Akashic Realm, as the explorers found it, was not the afterlife promised to sinners. It was - in the hastily-babbled words of those who remained sane enough to make the journey home - something worse.

The Akashic Realm, as the explorers found it, was not the afterlife promised to sinners. It was - in the hastily-babbled words of those who remained sane enough to make the journey home - something worse.

First of all, the laws of reality meant nothing in the Akashic Realm, or if they did, they were applied very...inconsistently. Time, for example, was mutable in the realm, in the sense that someone could spend a few minutes inside the Akashic Realm, and a year would have passed outside of it. Sometimes the inverse happened - one particular Magical Girl who'd volunteered in a solo mission was in and out of a stabilized Akashic Point in no less than ten seconds, and she'd returned a gibbering old woman, shrieking curses and pleas for death before Witching Out.

Gravity and geometry also were twisted, making not only exploring the realm an entire nightmare, but also one that drove the non-contracted staff insane. Some landscapes inside the Akashic Realm simply defied description, or imagination. A few resembled the hell that the Akashic Realm was rumored to be, all mountains of skulls and lakes of blood and the air stinking of sulfur. Most were not meant to be looked at.

But what made the Akashic Realm much more dangerous than its blatant disregard of the laws that underpin reality was that it was infested with Witches. And not just the typical novice-squad fodder Witch that a high-ranking Eversor or Vindicare could solo - these were powerful ones. Old ones, intelligent ones the ones that had tasted human flesh and evolved past the normal categories of Witches and well into Alpha Class. Omega Class, even. Witches that usually took multiple squads to put down - or even multiple Officios. Officio breakers. Career-enders. Witches that not only hungered, but also hunted.

>>35150154

"That's where we arrive at the most feasible theory of what the Akashic Realm is," It was Kyuubey who spoke that time. "That it is a giant, amalgamated Witch's Nightmare, one housing an untold number of Witches. Perhaps it was formed by those Witches gathering in one place, or that it had been there all along, borne from a particularly powerful Witch that we don't even have a category for. Neither hypothesis fills us with any optimism, of course, but there we are."

Vintage and Kyuubey then began throwing other theories at you, as if they thought you'd be interested. In a way, you were, up until they started drowning in you in metaphysical technobabble. The words 'quantum' and 'string theory' were tossed about, but one theory struck you in particular, especially with what you've learned from the stooges.

That the Akashic Realm was a future. Or rather, THE future, one that had been killed by some catastrophic event that unleashed so many Witches upon it all at once. There was evidence of it found - of certain parts of the Realm matching up to actual cities in reality, but broken and reaved clean of life. The expeditions that found these cities searched high and low to find some chronological proof of just when this event happened, to see if they could bring home a warning - but each one found a different date of armageddon. Some much too far into the future, others of days long past. A few found no proof at all, except for visions of a black-winged goddess cackling in the sky.

You wrote this down too. And underlined it. And circled it a couple of times.

After this, the Akashic Points were a bit easier to understand. They were simply what was called the 'portals' to the Akashic Realm. Holes in reality that would tear themselves open with no warning at all, at any place, at any time. Sometimes they opened and closed without issue, and without anyone the wiser.

>>35150170

Sometimes they let a Witch through - and a team would be quickly dispatched to take care of it. Very rarely would they stabilize and stay open - serving not only as a portal leading out of the realm, but also one to permit entry. Portals like that were as treasured as they were dreaded, apparently - as any Officio who had control of one would have a reliable source of Grief Cores, should they fall upon hard times. Of course, they would have to venture into the realm itself and fight Omega-category Witches to harvest those cores, but a desperate Incubator would not balk at such a thing, much less the Magical Girls it led.

You asked them a few questions at that point, you're sure. No one trying to take this all in wouldn't have a few questions of their own, surely.

What did you ask Kyuubey and Vintage?

[]Why is this a secret?
[]Are there any Akashic Points in Japan?
[]Is there anything else that would lead to the Akashic Realm Future theory?
[]No, you're misremembering things. You didn't ask them anything else, you let them continue.

The end result of every failed timeline Homura ever visited. The universes where Madokami never ascended.

Those timelines don't just blink out of existence after Homuhomu leaves They were torn apart by witches and became a kind of "dead universe".

Hence, the wailing, the despair, and the hellscape.

I wonder if this realm is somehow related to the apocalyptic scenario we saw when we used timestop. There were black feathers and everything was dead&destroyed.

Maybe our timestop somehow shifts us out of the real world and closer to these Akashic realms or something bizarre like that.

We should consult the three stooges about this.

I don't know. Early timelines would have been essentially normal (Madokas witch would not have been unstoppable), so Homura moving on would not have destroyed the world.

Later timelines where Madoka has become godlike due to Homuras interference would have had Kriemhild Gretchen absorb the world into her barrier.

Looking at the wiki, it says this: "Witch of salvation. Her nature is mercy. She absorbs any life on the planet into her newly created heaven--her barrier."

Does not really match either way.

Shadowruns intensify

I think it's pretty obvious what happened.

Homucifer is a Chiaki witch on par with Pinky. She made all other Magical Girls become witches and rules them all as a fallen angel. Combined with the shield...homucifer was able to extend her influence beyond just her own timeline. The shield's capacity for erasing what has already come did not completely eliminate her.

You asked your questions, right enough, as politely as you could have managed at the time. Vintage herself answered, but not after looking towards Kyuubey - as if seeking permission. You saw him nod then, which practically confirmed it.

...Now why would an Equerry of the First ask an Incubator of the Ninth permission for anything? But you filed this away for later, eager to absorb Vintage's answers first before indulging your own suspicions.

"There are Akashic Points everywhere, all over the place." Vintage had gestured to the globe. "But like we explained, they're transient tears in reality, and they resolve in their own quickly enough that nothing of any significance can slip through. As for your question, though, yes. There were three of them, stable ones that needed guarding."

Another smile. "The First, beloved by all, sent for three of his brothers to guard each one, with their own Magical Girls. To build their base of operations around each one, protecting the outside world from anything that tried to get out, and ensuring that no unenlightened soul tried to get in." She holds up two dainty fingers. "Two of them unfortunately collapsed into themselves, early on. Only one stable Akashic Point remains in Japan."

You couldn't hide your surprise then, when you caught up and connected the dots that they'd shown you. You made it clear to them, after writing it down in your journal.

The fucking...the fucking building is built on top of a fucking Akashic Point?

"Stabilized, warded, and fully protected," Kyuubey was quick to reassure you. "It presents no harm to us currently, nor do I forsee it being an issue in the future." It's here that you heard the frown in his voice.

>>35151709

"Conversely, it has no use at the moment, either. This particular Akashic Point seems to be...well, eating those who steps into it, before spitting them back out a moment later as burning, twisted corpses. Anything we toss into it gets thrown back out either torn to pieces or half-dissolved in corrosive stomach acid and blood."

Huh. Well. That does sound useless, you'd replied. Kyuubey merely shrugged, and let Vintage continue.

"The evidence that points to the Akashic Realm Future theory, well..." The Equerry hesitated there, glancing once more at Kyuubey's direction. The nod she received egged her on. "...Expeditionary parties, specifically those led by Magical Girls, started encountering Witches. Nothing out of the ordinary, considering where they are, correct?"

You nodded here, hiding the fact that you were getting irritated by her pauses. As nice as she seemed, you found her penchant for dramatic phrasing a bit grating. ...Well, it was either that, or this wasn't a subject she relished talking about.

"They were encountering their own Witches." Vintage closed her eyes then, shivering slightly, as if reliving a particularly nasty memory. "They didn't have any markers or any equipment that would confirm this beyond any reasonable doubt, but those that managed to survive such an encounter and then come back all said the same thing: that they had fought their own selves, but twisted into the monsters we have always been fated to become."

"Such reports have always been dismissed as delirious visions brought about by Realm Exposure," Kyuubey had chimed in, but there was a faint note of disbelief in his voice. "But nearly all the reports that come from expedition survivors do contain accounts of such phenomena. A Magical Girl being attacked by her own Witch, her own manifestation of despair."

But shouldn't that be enough? Isn't that enough proof?

>>35151754

Kyuubey's stare was long and cold and silent, spoiled somewhat by Vintage uncapping her flask and draining it. "Without concrete proof, the theory remains just that: a theory. It's an interesting one, though, to be sure." The Incubator nodded once, ears flapping, before nodding once more to Vintage.

"As for the vision of the black-winged goddess, only a handful of people truly saw it, and the accounts are a bit outdated." Vintage seemed to recover here, as if glad to be getting back to more comfortable territory. "But the descriptions match, even when you consider they were made years apart. Black wings, sharklike eyes, and a laugh that chills your bones and freezes your soul."

You were writing these down before she added, as an afterthought: "And a ribbon, red as blood, tied into her hair."

...Yep. You made sure to underline that, too.

"It's not the only theory that begs to be examined in closer detail." Kyuubey chuckled. "For instance, there's a school of thought that all the Akashic Points - the stable ones, anyway - are all connected to each other. This is the basis, of course, for our teleportation technology, but only in the most basic and potentially fatal sense. It's why we've yet to adopt it as a stable means of transportation, after all."

Well. Besides that tidbit making you vow never to step onto a fucking teleporter for the rest of your fucking life, that's pretty much what all you learned about the Akashic Realm, and the Akashic Points that opened to it. You learned that the biggest one that has been stable ever since it was found is under the Second's eternal protection, with their castle built right on top of it. It's also the only one cursed with a name - Ocularis Terribus.

And unlike the one your office building is sitting under, it was reasonably safe to enter for expeditionary purposes - for a given level of safe, anyway. Anyone who wanted to look into the realm where gods and mortals meet can hardly do better than the Eye of Terror - that is, if they're invited by the Second to one of their 'Crusades'.

It's here that you remembered something, and immediately blurted it out to Kyuubey. The Big Shell mission. The Witch Core you were asked to recover. Does that mean...?

"Our Grief Seed supplies are ample." Kyuubey had replied, and left it at that. Well, not before reminding you that the information you were just informed about was in fact classified to the highest degree, and must be kept absolutely confidential. Warmaster only.

Back in your office, you let out a sigh as you come to the last page of your notes about this particular topic. That was an ordeal to keep track of and remember. Besides the fact that the knowledge of a very real and very tangible Hell now rested on your shoulders, there was also that theory that kept pulling at your subconscious. That, and the reported sighting of the black-winged goddess with the freaky giggling.

You take off your glasses and pinch the bridge of your nose for a moment, closing your eyes against a migraine trying to gnaw its way through the back of your head.

Right. Now, what do you do?

I feel these are both vitally important. The stooges will certainly have recognized the ribbon reference if nothing else.

Also, I seem to recall Murderface mentioning that after all GWs had been collected, TNO had to be fought in the place where "gods and mortals meet", which suggests they do have some knowledge of this.

She turns to you. "Get the Golden Weapons. All of them. Use them to kill her, in the realm where gods and mortals meet." She taps at her Shield. "Only then you'll be able to save her."

Murderface has his own solution:
+ NOT. ONLY. WAY. + The pulse finally finds it way back to you in a pain-filled stab. + FIND. GOLDEN WEAPONS. KILL. TRANSCENDENT ONE. +

Either way though, it seems our ultimate goal is to gather all 20 golden weapons, and then jump into one of these portals and kill either Madoka or TNO.

You decide to continue on with your notes on what Midori told you last night. After the party, and after your...well, stern talking-to about her behavior during the meeting with Wendy. There were tears involved, of course, but you understood where she was coming from. That didn't make it right, you made sure to point out. She promised not to do it again, and then, you asked her about Siberia.

...Looking at your notes, you can't believe that so much had happened then that you don't remember at all. Not even the bit when you supposedly went berserk after Midori died, and engaged your winged self in what could be the world's most violent suicide (or masturbation, you could almost hear Kharn cackle). You don't remember any of it, even though it was...well, you. It was all you. Fragments of yourself, trying to murder each other, while protecting the green-haired girl trying to rescue you.

Maybe something went wrong. Or maybe you're not supposed to. Maybe that's the point.

Anyway, from what you learned - the incident back at Siberia seemed to have split your psyche into four pieces. The first one Midori found in the barrier - with Pinky's help - was the one that sounded much like Braids. The second was, in her own words, 'a much cuter version of Sempai', which you frowned at. The third was a dead ringer for Murderface, and the fourth...well, you want to say it's Dildoes, but besides being an annoying bitch, she didn't seem evil. Sorta unhinged, sure, but not evil. For one, she didn't have the golden wings and shit. And she hasn't tried to kill Midori yet.

The stuff about Pinky, though...that had you pay attention to Midori's every word, enough that the Callidus began squirming self-consciously on the spot, seemingly uncomfortable with how hard you were staring at her.

She tried her best regardless, telling you about how the pink-haired demon not only helped her find the Braids-fragment, but also protect her from a berserk Murderface - even sacrificing herself just so Midori could get away.

But the most important thing you learned in Midori's account - and something you made sure to write in its own fresh page, just to emphasize how important it is: Pinky isn't as insane or as crazy as she says she is. It's just one side of her - the corrupted side. There's another side to her, one with amber eyes and a dress of pure white, and smiled instead of grinned. Giggled instead of cackled.

Saved souls instead of devouring them.

That's something to remember. That's something you should definitely tell the Stooges.

Oh, and there's the thing about...well, Malal forcing Pinky to give Midori a second chance. Because she was in your own barrier for some reason.

Did you ask Midori any questions about Siberia? You can't remember. All you do remember is that, well...things got sort of heated after she stopped crying. She wanted to cuddle, but then she started taking your costume off, and...

...Well, did you ask her anything?

You asked her a couple of questions, yeah. Nothing too invasive, and you made sure she'd finished crying before you did.

"I...I don't know, Sempai," She had answered your first question in her usual, hesitant way - somewhat stuttering the first word, as if thinking about changing tack in mid-sentence, before forging ahead anyway. "But she did listen to me then, even when the both of us were scared, and...she seemed like a really nice kid. Like a younger sister trying to be responsible, and even when it blows up on her, still tries to do so while doing her best not to cry." She pauses for a moment, looking down on her hands. "A-and, I helped her a bit, when she was waking you up, so maybe..."

Mmh. Well, that's fine, but with Pinky being mercurial as she is, you don't know if she can be trusted with the concept of gratitude, and the implicit trust that came with it. Still...maybe it's worth a shot, if things came down to that.

As for your last question, though?

"I...I think it was a fragment of her, Sempai. Just like you had fragments of yourself running around - except hers was rooted to one place in the school, somehow." Midori had begun to murmur her replies into your shoulder at this point, with her arms wrapped around you. "I wanted to see it for myself, but...she was really angry about it for some reason, so I didn't try to push the subject."

She shakes her head. "From how she described it, maybe it was a fragment of her past, before she became a Magical Girl? She talked about it being weak and whiny...and something about Sayaka-san, too..."

Hnh. That sorta makes sense. You can see Pinky being pissed about weakness. And if it was a fragment of her, then it'd be doubly infuriating and embarrassing for the insane goddess. After all, you haven't forgotten why she asked you to gind the golden weapons, so long ago - it was so she could have her rematch. But is it really the same now, when you've found out so much, and experienced so much?

Yet another thing to bring up with the Stooges, you figure.

You wanted to thank Midori for being honest with you, for remembering such...well, disturbing memories at your request. But she didn't give you the chance then. She wanted to apologize for what she did and for Wendy, the alcohol made the both of you a bit less uninhibited, and you were inside your unused quarters, so...

...

Well, here you are. Nursing a hangover and a glass of whiskey, reading your own memories written by your own shaky hand. Officially Warmaster. Officially a Watch-wearing Dildo.

And you've just finished reading your notes on what you learned last night.

You drain your glass of whiskey again, before putting your journal back in your inventory.

It's still a lot to take in, even when you've written down the main points in easily digestible chunks.

And to think you still have the Officio to worry about, along with the deal with the Prophet.

...Fuck. Well, just...one thing at a time, then. Hopefully you'll get some of them sorted before you have to deal with the others.

A quiet beeping noise alerts you to the folded laptop on your desk - and you carefully lever the top open, activating the screen with a tap of the keyboard. What greets you is your Culexus Rank Leader's helmeted face, her skulled helm growling at you from the screen. Omegon. Chitose Yuma.

>>35154260

"Good morning, Warmaster." The Culexus' vox speakers as usual robs her voice of all warmth, but you have the sneaking suspicion that there isn't really anything for the mechanical speakers to steal. "Congratulations on your ratification."

The congratulations is stiffly polite, but you're not going to jump down her throat for being on the wrong side of insincerity. At least she made the effort. You thank her and greet her all the same.

She nods at the screen, before clearing her throat. "Warmaster, one of the prisoners, Lucius, wishes to talk to you. She's decided to help us find Oriko."

Oh? Well...that's good, isn't it? But you left Mami to handle the prisoners from the Kirishima Ruri op, so she'll take care of it--

"No, Warmaster. Lucius wants to see you. She wants to confess to you." It's here that a sigh leaves her lips, transmitted by her vox-speakers as a waspish snarl-curse. "I think it's a trap to try and kill you, but she's not showing any signs of deception so far, and she IS shackled inside a Silent Room." A pause. "Maybe it's worth hearing her out."

How do you react?

[]Let her stew for a few more days. She can wait for a bit until I'm ready to talk to her.
[]...Wait for me. I'm on my way.
[]Refuse. This is Mami's job. You've delegated this. You have other things to worry about.

Eh, I can just chalk this off to Chiaki still thinking like an operative instead of a leader. Honestly, rushing to meet the demands of a prisoner AND going over the head of the subordinate we assigned to the case is a two for one crass error offer in leadership.

Again, it can always be chalked up to Chiaki "learning", but I doubt the lesson will ever stick.

Ordinary Girl Heather Crunch versus the Nakajima Sisters

Before me, Nakajima is shielded by no less than SIX robotic guardians. They bear a VERY strong resemblance to the other Nakajima meditating under the waterfall, although for some bizarre reason they are dressed- no, designed- to appear as maids. The caps and aprons appear to be there purely for aesthetic design, but the metal domes used for the dresses shield the legs from direct attack. And the poofy pads on the shoulders... They look as though they retract to reveal something. A small projectile launcher, perhaps? In any case, they are both decorative AND functional!

The mouth areas don't -appear- have any seams that indicate they would open. Unless it was a deception to hide weaponry in the head cavities, which I would NOT put past Nakajima! However, the articulation for the arms, hands, and fingers is CLEARLY visible to my amazing eyesight. They don't -look- as though they are capable of bending at the waist, and THAT is a problem for them if they lose their balance. I wonder if they have a stabilizer of some kind to compensate for that?

There are a set of metal plates covering the chests. Now THOSE are almost certainly covering some kind of weapons. Vulcan guns? Missile launchers? Flamethrowers? In any case, it's something that needs to be protected when not in use. Speaking of which, attached to the hem of the metal 'dress' on each one are what I am COMPLETELY CERTAIN are chain swords. Or was it chain sawds? I forget what they're called. In any case, they have sharp-looking teeth running along one edge of the blade. Probably powered by electricity instead of gasoline. Not the most reliable of weapons, but EXCELLENT for cutting a lesser magical girl open like a sapling.

BUT HEATHER CRUNCH IS NO LESSER MAGICAL GIRL!

"So, uhh..." Nakajima says to interrupt my admira- admonishment, SILENT ADMONISHMENT of her MECHANICAL ABOMINATIONS, "aren't you gonna transform now?"

Ha! As much as I would LOVE to show her just how SUPERIOR I am to her assembled robots by UTTERLY CRUSHING THEM, I need to TRAIN! To better myself, as dictated by the Soul Temperer's decree - by fighting as a civilian instead of as a magical girl! And to OVERCOME my dependency on my powers in place of pure, refined SKILL and PROWESS!

Thusly, I LAUGH DERISIVELY! And then I STRIKE A POSE! And POINT AT NAKAJIMA, AND SHOUT, "THE CRUNCH TRAIN DOES NOT STOP TO TRANSFORM TO FIGHT ROBOTS, NAKAJIMAAAA!"

"Ahahaha, that's adorable!" she laughs, LAUGHS, at my resolve! It is ABSOLUTELY infuriating! I MUST put my foot down in the face of such things!

"I AM NOT ADORABLE!" I inform her VERY STERNLY, wearing a VERY not-adorable face of CONVICTION! "I AM A SWORD OF JUSTICE!" I EMPHASIZE the last point with ELABORATE GESTICULATIONS! I should be posed in front of an EXPLOSION right now!

I'll make my own later. I DESERVE BETTER THAN THIS!

"Where's your sword, then?" Nakajima inquires. As expected of a villain, unable to understand a hero's resolve!

I respond by pounding my chest, and boasting, "I HAVE A SWORD... IN MY HEART!" And she just laughs again!

"Are you for real?" she asks between giggles.

"Come on over and find out," I respond. Oh yeah, that was cool.

"But seriously, though," Nakajima says, voice FULL of condescension, "show me that indestructible body of yours already!"

"It is a HANDICAP!" I declare. "THAT is how CONFIDENT I am that I will -not- be defeated by the likes of you OR your army of robots!"

"Weeell, this is more of a squad -"

"ENOUGH! NOW we talk with ACTIONS instead of words!" I snarl, posing dramatically once more. She is saying something or other but I YELL OVER HER SO THAT I AM NOT INTERRUPTED! "So unless you are RIGHTLY AFRAID of being CRUNCHED on by an ORDINARY girl, then BRING IT ON, NAKAJIMAAAAGGGH!"

That... Hurt?

I look down and... Part of my torso is... Gone. There's just a... A black, smoking gap where it used to be.

I'm... I'm not sure what... There was a bright flash of blue light, wasn't there? Or was that after I got hit? I turn my head to look at my assailants again and... Yes, their eyes are glowing. I can add lasers to the list of things they are able to do.

Well played, Nakajima.

"Science says you're not invincible when untransformed!" the heartless harpy cackles as her automatons advance upon my position. "Science also says you better hurry!"

Damn... Really hurts...

"It's just a scrape!" I reply, putting everything I have into maintaining a facade of absolute confidence. This entire venture feels like it may have been a bad idea.

"Come onnn, transform already!" Nakajima urges. A little voice in the back of my head repeats this urging. It'd be so much more sensible, it argues, to use every advantage I have to utterly crush my opposition.

But that would go against what I set out here to do! It would mean I learned NOTHING! I HAVE to do it this way!

"I will NOT transfo-" My declaration is cut off by the painful thump of a chainsword tapping against my left shoulder, followed by the quiet whirring of metal teeth as the trigger is pressed for just an instant. Blood splatters everywhere as it rips through flesh down to the bone. I have to bite my lip to keep from screaming in pain.

"You keep this up and you really -are- gonna be handicapped, Crunchy!" chides this... horrible, despicable murderous person as the blade is pulled back. Leaving a gaping, oozing gash behind. How can she do this with such a carefree smile?

Like you're any different when you're fighting, the voice nags. And starts to laugh.

"SHUT UP!" I scream to silence the both of them. I just need to disable the robots and...

Wait. How... How can I disable them like this? I don't have a weapon, and any contact would put me in danger of losing a limb. Transforming is not an option, either, but... I don't...

I don't think I could take them on in a straight fight at all. Not like this.

"If you say so!" this... Fiend cheerfully exclaims, before ordering her minions, "rip her up, but leave the gem intact, 'kay?"

The robots slowly, slowly move towards me, causing me to instinctively take a few steps back. What am I supposed to do here? How can I win this fight?

CAN I win this fight? Is it even winnable?

Just transform, that horrible voice buzzes, and trash them like the third-rate box of scraps they are!

SHUT UP! I am NOT listening to you and I am NOT compromising myself like that!

One of the maids focuses on my left leg as her eyes glow for a split second, and a quick step away causes another beam of blue light to just barely misses my right kneecap, in part because it didn't bother to turn its head to correct the shot. And yet the skin is charred black from the heat, and it hurts to stand on it.

…There really isn't any other option, is there? I'd hoped it wouldn't come to this. Ever. But It looks like I have no choice.

I plant one foot in front of me and bellow, "You've gone and done it NOW, NAKAJIMAAAA!" My expression is one of GRIM and RESOLUTE DETERMINATION, as I once again point at her. "I am FORCED to use my SECRET TECHNIQUE! One that I had hoped I would not need to EVER use!"

Her bemused smile fills me with confidence. Ha! She has absolutely NO idea what I am about to do! Which gives ME the ABSOLUTE ADVANTAGE with this technique!

"Alrighty, everyone!" Nakajima calls out, clapping her hands to get the attention of her machines. "Hold your positions and get ready!" And they stop in place and take up a defensive stance. HAH! PERFECT!

"THIS IS IT NAKAJIMAAAA!" I ROAR! "HEATHER CRUNCH'S SECRET TECHNIQUE FOR OVERCOMING AN OVERWHELMING DISADVANTAGE!" I take a deep breath in preparation!

And then I POINT JUST OVER my shoulder and mention, "I just remembered something important! See you later!" and throw the Crunch Train into a FULL SPEED REVERSAL! "RUNNING AWAY TECHNIQUE!"

"Ehhhh?! That's not very heroic at all!" shouts Nakajima towards my retreating back. I'd agree, but I REFUSE to give her that satisfaction!

The waterfall seems so much further away than it was before. But it's my best chance to deal with them. There was a cave entrance behind it, which means caves, which means I can lose them in there!

"Stop her, my underlings!" Nakajima urges from behind. "Shoot her!"

Let's see… What did Big Boss say to do when things are shooting at you? Keep going towards cover and… Don't move in a straight line away from the shooter! So JUMP to the left and AUGH THAT HURTS!

I forgot about that injury from before. It's so UTTERLY INCONVENIENT, having to deal with such things during moments of URGENCY such as THIS!

A near miss reminds me that I MUST keep moving and IGNORE this pain! And so I SPRINT back into action, dodging away from the LASER BLASTS again and again and AGAIN! While not as fulfilling as engaging them directly, I am still aware that I am fighting against ROBOTS! My adrenaline is SURGING! My blood is BOILING! My heart is POUNDING! My hair is BURNING and I-

MY HAIR IS BURNING! MY HAIR IS BURNIIIIING! I CAN SEE THE BLAZING FLAMES OF ACTUAL FLAMES BLAZING AS THEY SWIFTLY DEVOUR MY RIGHTHAND TWINTAIL AND BURN MY SKIN AND IT HURTS! IT WAS SUPPOSED TO BE DRENCHED AND NOW IT'S BURNING AND IT SMELLS AWFUL AND IT HURTS!

"Ahahaha! Oh wow, she looks like a cat with its tail on fire!" NAKAJIMA HOWLS WITH LAUGHTER! STOP LAUGHING, NAKAJIMAAAA! YOU WILL GET YOURS FOR THIS!

"Jade! Clothesline her!" ORDERS NAKAJIMA! AND I HAD FORGOTTEN THAT OTHER NAKAJIMA BLOCKS MY PATH! I NEED THAT PRECIOUS WATER BEFORE MY SPOTLESS SKIN IS SEVERELY SCORCHED!

"Jaaaade!"

AND SHE IS NOT MOVING! FORTUITOUS FOR ME AS I NEED TO KEEP MOVING TOWARD THE WATERFALL SHE WAITS BENEATH!

"What the heckles, Jade!" SHOUTS NAKAJIMA, "you're not being a team player!" OTHER NAKAJIMA WAKES, BUT SHE IS TOO LATE!

As the waters cascade over me, I hear the sound of a flame being extinguished. And -that- merely serves to IGNITE MY DRIVE TOWARDS VICTORY! FURTHERMORE, my leg and my side hurt LESS as the chilly water pours down, and it RINSES my burning blood out of the fresh wound in my shoulder!

The other Nakajima looms behind, but THE CRUNCH TRAIN IS BACK ON TRACK! FOLLOW THE FLOWING WATER TO VICTORY, CRUNCH! INTO THE DARKNESS!

MY BURNING SPIRIT WILL LIGHT THE WAY FOR ME!

Or, after running in far enough that I cannot rely on my eyes alone, I can use the brilliant light of my soul gem instead. Metaphorical fires do not actually help you see in the dark. Or keep you warm for very long. These wet clothes are starting to feel cold.

Hmm… I was hoping for an expansive cavern or branching tunnels, but this river path has been frustratingly linear-

AHA! JACKPOT!

I have just stumbled into an EXPANSIVE CAVERN with what I assume are BRANCHING TUNNELS and a few LARGE ROCKS scattered around! And it has a RAMP up to ANOTHER TUNNEL! FURTHERMORE, the stream I had been following leads to YET ANOTHER TUNNEL! Interesting, but THIS, THIS ROOM HERE, will make a GRAND STAGE for an EPIC CONFRONTATION between GOOD and EVIL!

But first, after stepping out of the stream and tracking water everywhere, I must make preparations. Preparations such as dealing with the inconveniences of injuries and wet clothing. Luckily, I am completely certain nobody is here this time to catch me stripping down and wringing out the shirt, pants and underwear I wore.

Before redressing… I tear off a long part of the right pants leg, and tear that vertically. Tying it over my shoulder wound, it does well enough as a bandage in the absence of actual medical supplies.

You have medical supplies, the voice grumbles faintly as I get dressed; you just need to access your inventory.

Not listening to you, annoying voice.

Now then, how many feet away from your soul gem can you be?

[6/10]

>> ☐ Attarou 09/27/14(Sat)16:02:15 No.35154939

Perching up on the ramp gives me a good vantage point. And it conceals me from the lights approaching from the way I just came, which were preceded by the sloshing of water as several people trudged through.

“Heyyy Crunchy!” Nakajima’s eerily cheery voice calls out, echoing through the cavern. “Come out, come out wherever you are!”

The six robots emerge, a pair of floodlights mounted on each shoulder. Their heads swivel around as the narrow beams sweep through the cavern, and pass over my hiding spot. I had hoped they were tracking me by my soul gem. Perhaps I overestimated them. Or perhaps it’s not very exact.

A fair distance behind the robotic minions, I can make out the figures of the Nakajima sisters. Hiding behind your underlings, eh, Nakajima?

Rather than fanning out, the robots are moving in a formation of three rows of two. Terrible news if they catch me, as it means I have to deal with them all at once, but wonderful news if they fail to find me. Which I’m betting on, as it appears they have just noticed my bait.

Yes, there they go, drawn towards the faint red glow of my soul gem below, in an alcove beneath the ramp, with the real Nakajimas staying a fair distance behind them. The mechanical whirring draws closer and closer as the robots are about to enter the alcove.

“Aha, found you-” starts Nakajima from somewhere below, who is interrupted as I spring my trap!

“ROCKS FALL, ROBOTS DIE!” I roar, pushing a huge rock onto the unsuspecting mechs beneath! There is a sound of metal breaking, followed by an explosion – aha, so THAT’S what was in the chest cavity. Surveying the damage, I see the alcove is not blocked off as I’d hoped, but TWO of my assailants have already been taken out!

“What the carp?!” screeches Nakajima in surprise. Already I am sprinting down the ramp to engage the remaining four, picking up the large rock I had set down earlier.

“You fell RIGHT into my trap, Nakajimaaa!” I yell, the lights - and the robots - turning around to face me as I slow down to take in the moment. Yes, that’s right, Crunch is BACK in the spotlight!

“Shoot her shoot her shoot herrrr!” shouts an excited Nakajima, and four sets of eyes glow in unison. JUST AS I WAS HOPING! For that means I can immediately JUMP out of the way and continue my slow advance! YES INDEED, so confident am I, that I don’t even NEED to hurry! I can savor the moment, savor dodging ANOTHER volley of lasers, savor NOT getting scorched this time! Savor fighting KILLER ROBOTS!

“NICE TRY, NAKAJIMA,” I boast, grinning and pointing at… Where I’m pretty sure she is. “but I know your machines’ WEAKNESSES!”

“Getting crushed by rocks isn’t a-“

“AS I had originally figured,” I gladly interrupt, “THESE units you built cannot SEE the target for the second they spend charging up their LASER BLASTS.” Right on time, another salvo shoots past. I can feel the heat, but it doesn’t hurt. NOTHING hurts right now. “Of course you KNEW that, didn’t you? So you have them COMPENSATE if the target is moving!” I start running to the side, and the robots’ heads swivel to follow, as their eyes gain that telltale glow. “HOWEVER!” I say, moving in exactly the OPPOSITE direction. “They CANNOT compensate for somebody changing direction WHILE THEY ARE MOVING!” And, sure enough, when they fire, their heads are pointed in the direction I was going before, and NOT where I am now. I have OFFICIALLY outsmarted them!

>> ☐ Attarou 09/27/14(Sat)16:04:29 No.35154982

“BECAUSE I HAVE OBSERVED EVEN MORE WEAKNESSES!” I respond. As I cross into melee range, the maids begin reaching for their chainswords. “Covering the legs to keep them from being damaged was a good plan, except the arms do NOT bend back enough for them to right themselves if knocked down, LIKE SO!”

I LEAP into the air and deliver a FLYING kick to the nearest robot who JUST finished unsheathing its weapon! HYAA!

…OW! Kicking something made of metal is VERY PAINFUL!

But it WORKED! For the machine is THROWN into its companion, and BOTH topple to the ground! Their arms and legs wiggle helplessly as they FAIL to right themselves!

A whirring sound indicates that the other two robots have successfully armed themselves and are about to chop me up with overhand slashes. Whoops.

I LEAP back as best as I can (ow ow ow) and the chainswords CARVE through their fallen companion and DIG into the ground! Another one down, AND it appears that they have embedded their weapons in the rock! I RUSH forward and BASH the other downed unit in the face with my rock until the robot ceases its movements!

“THAT’S FOUR DOWN, NAKAJIMAAAA!” I proudly declare!

There’s no sound other than the mechanical whirring from the other two robomaids struggling with their weapons, and my heavy breathing. Finally, Nakajima speaks up in a low, quiet voice, and asks, “…Who are you, and what did you do with the idiot we were fighting earlier?”

“Ha HA!” I laugh, and point, and POSE! “Through simple observation, THIS level of planning is possible for Heather Crunch! What do you think, Nakajimaaaa!”

…Of course having their weapons trapped in the ground was a stroke of good luck, but it’s better if she doesn’t know that.

“It was very surprising,” Nakajima rep- Wait…

“NOT YOU!” I growl. I am getting TIRED of this gag!

“I thiiiiink we can unleash the rockets now!” Nakajima cackles, as the remaining robots leave their weapons behind. The metal plates on their chests part to reveal an array of warheads poised to launch!

“I’M NOT DONE YET!” I roar. “After all, you needed to keep THOSE covered up because they make for great targets!”

“Aaahh, please shut her up henchlings!” Amber howls as the missiles are primed. BUT TOO LITTLE TOO LATE!

“ROBOT ROCKING STRIKE!” I YELL AS I HURL MY ROCK AT THE CHEST OF ONE OF THEM, AND IT EXPLODES!

YES! I am now POSED IN FRONT OF AN EXPLOSION! LIFE IS GOOD!

I spin back to face them and yell at my remaining adversary, “AND THEN THERE WAS ONE!”

It UNLEASHES its furious salvo of missiles at me, but I am TOO FAST!

“HA! YOU MISSED M-“

-BANG-

…Everything starts to spin as I am tossed forward…

…I can’t move my head…

…I can’t feel anything below my neck…

…I can see the last robot some distance back…

…And it is crushed by a stalactite…

…The only light left is the red of my soul gem…

…And then everything goes dark…

"Huh... Didn't think she'd win."

"Yeah, it was weird! I'm surprised Crunchy knew anything about... Well, anything!"

"We may have underestimated her intelligence."

"Mayyybe? She might just be some kind of idiot savant. Anyway, did you record the fight?"

"The combat data has been recorded."

"Not the data I wanted, buuuut it's not like it was hard to jury-rig a bunch of low-grade robots from pieces of the old hideout."

"It may yet prove useful."

"And more importantly, now she can't stop us from experimenting on-"

"Sister. We promised."

"I guessss. You grab her soul gem and I'll gather up all the pieces of her I can get."

"It was fortunate that she had it placed somewhere away from the fight."

"Yeah, yeah, but wouldn't it have been funny if she had actually died?"

"Not especially."

"What's lucky is that her body is mostly intact!"

"Sister? We must hurry if we are to finish before Miss Tenko returns."

"I'm comiiing!"

"...Do you have to do that?"

"Heeheehee, her butt is squishy, too~."

An Irish Girls Wish Pt. 1: Memorial To The Fallen

"Nokota Williams, what is your mission?"

"Join their ranks and gather intelligence."

A pair of deep blue eyes looked out over the Mojave desert as the Hind D flew through the sun baked sky. On the horizon stood the Olympia, a gargantuan being of metal and gears. Nokota sighed, a spike-tipped silver cross was held to her chest as she whispered small prayers to herself.

"And how can we achieve victory, young one?"

"By crushing the non-believers."

The girl flattened the wrinkles in her habit, and stared at her mocha colored skin as memories flooded her mind.

~~~~~~

A chopper roared over the Mediterranean Sea from Ankara, Turkey, heading towards the small island of Cyprus. Its cargo, five young women, shifted uncomfortably in their seats. The early morning twilight cast an eerie darkness inside the passenger compartment.

"Why so fucking early? I mean, we barely got any sleep on the flight to Turkey and now we'll have to be up all god damn day."

The voice came from a black haired, silver eyed lady, clad in a red hooded cloak. She pulled at the sleeves of her black blouse and the hem of her skirt. "I'm taking a cat nap."

The girl seated next to her fidgeted about, rubbing her emerald eyes in an attempt to stay awake. "I thought we had to all stay up Natalie?" Her thick Irish accent coated her words as she ran her hands through her short black hair, trying to flatten and straighten her flared out hair in the back. "What about jet lag and all?"

"Shut it Ashlin. I don't want to hear your bitchin'."
~~~~~~

"O-okay..."

The cab grew silent, the only sound coming out was the hum of the Gaston 24Ms engine and rotors. Ashlin shuffled in her seat more to fend off sleep, this time turning to her left to a lady in a nun's habit.

"Ummm, Nokota? Where're we headed again?"

"To the island of Cyprus. You remember why, right?"

Ashlin stared at the spectacled blue eyes of her companion, wracking her brain. "Oh yeah! I remember." She mentally kicked herself for lying, and to a nun of the Blessed Lady to boot. "Let's hope we can land soon."

Nokota let out a soft chuckle, seeing through the obvious ruse. "I pray that we do." She removed the headpiece of her habit, letting her platinum blonde hair curl around her head. She brushed the bangs from her eyes, the short, curly locks contrasting with her mocha brown skin. "I could really use a shower."

"How you liking the Fourth?" Ashlin beamed at the nun, her eyes wide with curiosity. "You've been there for a few months, right?"

Nokota ran her hands through her hair, taking a deep breath. "Yeah, it's been a little bit. Need to keep the faith up, you know? After all that happened, we girls need it." She turned to face Ashlin, meeting the Irish girls eyes. "What about yourself? Is everything going well for you?"

"I guess it is. It's much different living in a giant robot than a castle in Europe." Ashlin's eyes veered to the floor as her voice grew soft. "I...I hope my mom is doing okay..."

"I'm sure she's fine, Ashlin. Isn't your father taking care of her?"

"No...he died when I was really little..."

Nokota flinched at the revelation. "Oh, I'm sorry. I don't mean to bring up painful memories."

"It's fine, really." Ashlin waved her hand gently, brushing the comment aside. "I was barely six, so my memories are a little foggy."

"Your father would be proud of you, I think. I'll pray for your mothers safety. The Blessed Lady looks after all her children, and their loved ones."

The cab grew silent, Nokota closing her eyes in prayer, Ashlin doing what she could to stay awake, and Natalie passed out and not a single word from any of them. A call from the pilot broke the silence, letting the girls know arrival would be within the half hour. Silence took the chopper again, until Nokota leaned forward, removing her hood in a scowl.

"Why were we sent with you two?"

The petite-framed Ashlin looked at Natalie, Nokota merely glancing from her prayers. "I mean, you can't fight worth a shit Ashlin, and Nokota there says she's on a pilgrimage, but I know that's a fucking lie."

Ashlin turned to the floor, mumbling a soft 'sorry' to her self. "I-I know I can't fight really well, but I-"

"-try? You 'try'?" Natalie's voice oozed with malice as she glared at the timid girl next to her. "I've seen what 'trying' gets you, and it gets you no where. Only results in your comrades dying. And that's all you do Ash. You try."

She let out a sharp grunt before slamming herself back into the seat, a stern, angry look plastered on her face. "Let's hope you don't try anything, lest you get one of us killed."

Nokota stood up with a jolt, her calm, praying demeanor replaced with one of anger. "Natalie Miles, how DARE you talk to a teammate like that!" She glanced down at Ashlin, her emerald eyes still facing the floor but now welling with tears. "You're making the poor girl cry!"

"Then she needs to stop being such a fucking coward and stand up for herself! Ashlin always cowers away from fights, cries whenever people simply fucking yell at her, and how she apologizes for everything, oh my FUCKING GOD! Do you really want someone like that watching your back?!"

Nokota just stared, her breathing becoming heavy. "I believe Ashlin is a good person and can be a wonderful ally, but if bitches like you are all she has, NO WONDER she feels like she can't do anything!"

"Do you wanna roll, you fuckin' oreo slut?!"

"THAT'S. ENOUGH."

A voice boomed from the other side of the compartment, loud and commanding. "Natalie Miles, Nokota Williams, both of you will sit and be quiet for the rest of this flight." Its source, a tall, tan woman, stood. Her mere presence made the room silent. "I will not tolerate any kind of shit flinging. Do you understand?"

The two girls quietly sat down, each muttering a quick 'yes ma'am'.

"Good."

The tall woman sat back down, pulling her long, copper red hair away from her seat. She sighed, turning to the fifth member in the passenger compartment. "Please, tell me we won't have to deal with this shit for too long, Edea. I don't think my soul gem can take the stress."

Edea gave her a gentle smile, petting the taller woman's head. "You'll be fine Maria. I doubt the arguing of two girls is gonna make you witch out or anything." She pulled at her long, single braided blonde hair, smacking Maria with it. "You're tougher than that."

Another sigh. "Doesn't make things any easier. At least I have you to rely on." The red head stared into the golden yellow orbs of Edea. "You know I love you, right?"

"Uh, ummm. Miss Maria, there are others here too..."

The two love birds turned to Ashlin, both blushing slightly. "Oh, sorry Ashlin."

~~~~~~

Gusts from the Gaston's blades whipped up the dust and debris as it landed at the base of Mt. Chionistra, the largest mountain on the island of Cyprus. As the engines idled, the five occupants exited, each with their belongings in their bags. Barely off the chopper, multiple bodies of the Heavy Ironforms, the staple physical constructs of the Fourth Officio, were wheeled into the cargo and passenger compartments.

Edea gasped slightly as the mechanical magical girls were wheeled by, staring at the exposed wiring and gears. "Wh-what the hell happened?"

Her answer came from a tall, slender Ironform, painted in a deep blue. "Non-stop attacks over these past few days. Damage was too great to repair here, had to send them back to the Olympia." The fully metallic woman brushed her hands over her short, hime-cut styled 'hair' before extending a hand out. "Leah Stroud, Eversor commander for the Walpurgis Memorial Project."

Each of the girls shook her hand, greeting her, Maria last. "Maria Brae. I'm the selected leader of our little group here. So, what's-" She was abruptly cut off as the Gaston began lift off, more dirt being tossed around.

As the chopper's blades grew silent in the distance, Maria continued. "-been going on? All we know is that your group has been getting its ass kicked and needed replacements."

Leah let out a distorted sigh before motioning the girls to follow. "Let me show you to our 'strategy room' before we get into the really shitty parts."

The so called strategy room, a small, one room building, sat off to the left of the still in progress statue. As the six girls walked inside, a gentle light above flickered, illuminating enough to compensate for the just rising sun.

"All right, the rundown of the thing." Leah sat down behind a dark metal desk as a small projector rose from it. "We've been working on a monument project for the past few months." A flash, and a panning video of the area popped up from the projector. "But of course, with all things, there are people who want to fuck it up."

The video switched to a view of a battle, gunfire and small explosions lighting up the night sky. The girls of the Fourth were being pushed back, before the feed was cut off. "That's how a lot of the latest attacks have been. Countless equipment repairs and chassis maintenance has taken a toll on our resources." The projector blinked off, submerging itself into the desk.

"Any questions?"

Natalie spoke first. "How far back as the project been pushed back?"

"We started on it about a month after Walpurgisnacht, and it's been three months since then. By all accounts, it was slated to be completed by June." Leah slumped slightly in her chair, pointing out the window. "And now we're nearly back to square one."

Edea sighed, stepping towards the window and gazing at the broken statue. "It was going to be a monument to the Blessed Lady, right? Looks like it was going to be beautiful too..." She turned to her comrades, a melancholy look in her eyes. "Why would people want to destroy this?"

Leah spoke again, a more firm and commanding tone to her voxed voice. "Because they're hired guns, they don't want to see it finished, or the worst offender, it clashes with their own faith." A small tap on the desk, and the projector appeared again, this time flashing images of various magical girls and the local populace. "At first, it was just hired mercs, which posed no threat. But as the weeks went on, it started becoming worse. Religious fanatics claiming it's a tribute to a false god or rogue magical girls claiming that the 'true' Blessed Lady frowns upon it."

She shook her head as the images continued. "The whole 'false' Lady unnerves me though. If we follow the same faith, why are they trying to hurt us?" Out of the corner of her eye, Leah spotted Nokota looking nervous and staring at the floor. "Is something wrong, Nokota?"

The young nun became flustered as she spoke. "N-no Miss Stroud! I-I'm fine." She clenched a large, silver cross to her chest, growing pale as Leah continued to stare at her. "I-is there something amiss?"

Leah let her eyes linger for a few more seconds before breaking eye contact. "No, nothing's wrong." She began panning over the rest of the rag tag bunch of fleshy magical girls, before setting her sights on Maria. "You're all probably wondering why you were sent instead of the Heavy Ironforms." Each of them nodded slightly, Ashlin giving a small shrug. "Reason being, you all can regenerate wounds and limbs. Our metal bodies, though much tougher, need to be replaced and properly repaired on the Olympia in case of severe damage." A few taps on the desk and more images started scrolling, this time of the ruined forms of the Fourths girls.

"We can do minor repairs here, but as you've seen coming in..." Her voice grows soft for a moment. "...we don't have simple repairs to deal with." Another desk tap and the projector disappeared into its cold, steel coffin once again. "But I do want to ask, why'd the Warsmith send you, Miss Williams?"

Nokota fumbled her words again, caught off guard at the formality. "Oh, uh, umm. I-I was sent as a negotiator of sorts. I can speak the local languages a bit and can try to reason with them if the situation calls for it!" Her face beamed with pride at the last statement, as if she was being given praise.

"That's if the locals will even LISTEN to reason."

~~~~~~

The next few hours went by quickly as the six girls discussed how watch duty was going to be dished out; 12 hour shifts of two girls with the Ironform girls as backup for attacks. At Leah's behest, the girls settled into their sleeping quarters, set away from the other buildings.
~~~~~~

Natalie plopped down on the small cot assigned to her, a light pomf coming from it. "Ah, feels good to finally fucking lay down. Sleep can't come soon enough." Patting the pillow, she laid her head down and closed her eyes. "That Leah seems like a nice lady!"

"Oh, if you'll excuse me ladies, I have some private matters to tend to." Nokota shifted her headpiece, making sure it was snug before bowing. "I'll be back shortly."

As the metallic click of the door closing signaled her leave, the room suddenly became silent, each girl lost in thought. Maria broke the silence, speaking what seemed to be on everyone's mind. "Private matters? We just got here."

Edea piped up, sliding off her black hiking boots. "Well, she DID seem kinda unnerved when Leah mentioned that false Lady. Maybe it has something to do with that?"

"Could be." A clattering of boots hitting floor came from Natalie's bunk. "She pops up at the Olympia shortly after Walpurgisnacht and starts preaching about the Blessed Lady. And now the news of a so called false Lady?" A scowl grew on her face as she unbuckled her hood. "Sounds really fucking fishy."

Ashlin, silent for the past few hours, snapped at the suggestion. "She's not doing anything wrong and you know it! Maybe she needed to talk to Leah alone? Doesn't mean she's doing anything suspicious, she's too nice for that!"

Natalie growled back at her, malice oozing out of every word. "So what? Nice little bitches such as her make me sick, and it's usually 'cause they hide shit like that." A swift punch to her pillow failed to quell her anger. "And just because she saved you on the chopper doesn't mean you should go and start licking her cunt."

For a moment, a glare of pure hate shot between Ashlin and Natalie, the former having reached her limit. "You're j-just je-jealous!" Tears started to well up in Ashlin's eyes, her anger boiling over into tears.

"Jealous of what?" Natalie slid off her bunk, and stood before Ashlin mere centimeters away. The silver eyed girl looked down, being a few inches taller. "Pray tell, why would I be jealous of that fucking mixed whore? That nun bit doesn't hide a fucking thing." Leaning forward, Natalie began pushing Ashlin back, pressing her forehead against the latter. "If you have something to say, then fucking say it."

>>35155270
"Miles!" The booming voice of Maria echoed in the small room, silencing everything. "If I have to tell you to calm your shit again, you WILL NOT like it. Understand me?!"

"Y-yes ma'am." Natalie's eyes quickly darted to the floor as she mumbled. "Fuckin' bitch."

+Yes, my lady. They don't know my true intentions. And I pray it stays that way.+ Nokota shifted on her knees as she prayed before the ruined statue. +Do I still have your blessing?+

+You will always have my blessing, child. Now go. And let not a single non-believer tarnish her name.+

+As you command.+ Nokota stood, flashing her soul gem back into the pearl white oval choker it was before.

"May the true Blessed Lady guide my path."

Yeah, this has actually been an in-universe thing for a LONG time - at least a year, maybe a year and a half. We didn't really have any reason for it to come up with Chiaki until the inauguration, but it was planned to factor into the Second stuff pretty heavily, but the approach I tried back then didn't really click with me (to the point where I might just rewrite that first chapter and tag the first go as completely noncanon).

Decu also requested that we not go into it at all until it was explained to Chiaki at this point, although that wasn't the plan back then.

Especially the ones that focus on the obscure Officios, like Ratmie's Riddle of Witch Flesh. I don't know if the Twelfth have ever been mentioned in the main threads, much less expanded upon, and Ratmie does a really interesting job building up an Officio we've haven't seen.

I've found that, the more write ups I read, the more my enjoyment of the main threads increases.

This is basically Decu's goal for theml: to flesh out the universe that Chiaki might not really get to experience normally.

I mean, Wendy's stuff has turned more and more relevant and whether that's good, bad, or me being some sort of questjacking harpy depends on who you ask, but for the most part, that was the goal to begin with.

Prose Magica does have bit of a slow start, but I'd recommend holding on until at least the end of the 1st arc (so around chapter 17 or 18). Archival does a really neat job with character development, and so I found the climax and resolution of that arc to be an amazing reading reading experience.

MAGICAL GIRL NOIR QUEST
THE FALL OF CHIAKI MATSUDA

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 09/28/14(Sun)09:39:46 No.35170783 Archived

It takes you less than a second to make your decision. Of course you remember that you delegated the task of interrogating the prisoners from the Kirishima op to Mami, but this is something else entirely. Lucius, the Magical Girl that had led a terrorist operation to not only kill your client in public but also murder you on camera - suddenly deciding to help you track down her boss? That's not something you'll turn down, even with the hangover punching needles into your brain.

"Wait for me at the main elevator," You tell the skulled helm of your Culexus Rank Leader. "I'm on my way."

"Warmaster." Yuma offers a curt salute, and the connection severs neatly with a beep, leaving you with a blank screen.

You're not an idiot, of course. Even before Yuma had told you about Lucius demanding to see you personally, you had an inkling that there'd be a catch in it somewhere- and while this isn't the Tokyo Tower of catches, it's still a pretty big one.

But catch or no catch, you'll till going. At worst, this could be the trap that the Culexus suspects it is - a last-ditch effort of Lucius' to try and take you out, in which case you'll be more than happy to deny her the chance and put her out of her misery once and for all. Mami still has a lead with Meteor Hammer Bitch, so that's not too much of a loss. And if Lucius actually DOES cooperate - if she proves herself as someone actually willing to help out - then you'll be able to get rid of this Prophet nonsense hanging over you AND yours like a fucking sword.

Yes, you're still sore about them going after Misaka. The fuckers TRIED to burn your arms dealer, a little girl barely out of puberty, alive. You've got no truck with so-called professionals who'd stoop so low as to go after a target like that - the fact that said little girl had a veritable armory in her warehouse as well as a nine-foot tall armored giant as a bodyguard notwithstanding.

You pour yourself one last drink, drain it, and then make to leave your office - but not before writing Midori a short note on where you've gone. You don't want her to worry when she wakes up, after all - but at the same time, you don't exactly need to wake her up to say goodbye. Since you're just going to a different floor in the same fucking building.

...Wait. Your dildo sense is tingling.

You should call someone about this, right? Someone else in your retinue should know, just in case shit does go down.

Yeah. Yeah, you probably should. ...It's the responsible thing to do.

God dammit.

You decide to let your Equerry know. It's the prudent thing to do, even if you do feel like the watch-wearing dildo you're supposed to be. You shake your head as you select Sayaka from your phone's contact list, and hold up the device to your ear as you wait for the call to connect.

The blue-haired Eversor picks up on the third ring - and big surprise, it seems you've called her up in the middle of another workout. Jesus Christ, just what kind of fitness-obsessed monster is your Equerry, anyway? And to think that she matched you drink for drink last night, even ending up facedown on the table at the tail end of the party before being roused by Kyoko. Your best friend had to carry her back to their quarters, for fuck's sake! And instead of sleeping off her hangover just like any decent person would, she's pumping iron! That's insane! She's insane!

"Well fuck you too, Murderface." Sayaka growls, her words punctuated by the sound of clanking metal. "You should try it sometime, you know. Sweat all the alcohol out of your system instead of just sitting on your ass feeling sorry for yourself. Gets it all out that much faster, and gets your blood going, too. Always worked for me."

It's here, then, that you hear her smile over the phone line. "Come on, join me one of these days. I'll even spot you, just to make sure you don't hurt yourself with those noodles you call arms."

...Yeah, no. The Eversor training she roped you into signing up for's enough. While you don't exactly like having a physique that's repeatedly being compared to floppy strings of rice dough, you're not jonesing for the Amazonian look either.

"Suit yourself." Sayaka grunts, giving you the vocal equivalent of a non-committal shrug. "What're you calling me for, anyway?"

>>35171594

You tell her, and you manage to jerk the phone away just in time to avoid having your eardrums split by the sound of crashing metal.

"...What? Lucius wants to rat on Oriko, but only if you're there?" Sayaka is serious now, the humor in her voice gone, replaced by her usual sharp seriousness. "And you're actually going?"

Yeah. That's why you called. You're telling her that you are.

"Murderface." When she says your name - well, your nickname, one that you've given to the fragment with fire in her mind and metal shards for teeth - it's with a tired, seething frustration, the same tone of voice that a parent would use when addressing an eternally-recalcitrant child. "You do realize that she's up to something, right? That she's going to try and get you killed?"

How do you respond?

[]No, Sayaka, I don't. Apparently I'm just that stupid. ...What the fuck do you think? I know what I'm doing.
[]I'm aware of that, yes. But I still want to hear what she has to say. I'll kill her myself if she's just wasting our time.

...Of course you're aware of that, you tell Sayaka. You're fully aware that this could easily be a trick on Lucius' part, one that would see you dead if you're not careful. But at the same time, you want to hear what she has to say, and if it's even worth listening to. If it isn't - if you find that the captured Eversor is just wasting your time - then you'll execute her yourself, and that'll be that.

"Well, as long as you know how much this stinks." Sayaka replies after a moment, suspicion still tainting her voice. "Meet you in front of her Silent Room, then, Murderface?"

You allow yourself a small pleased smile at this. You've made a lot of bad decisions, sure, but the decision of making Sayaka your Equerry is one you're particularly proud of. Having to deal with the blue-haired Eversor being a massive bitch aside, she'd been nothing but commendably effective - save for a couple of times when she really got up in your grill. You may have actually found your Malal. Now if only you could get her to do your paperwork for you--

"Murderface?" Sayaka calls you by your abandoned nickname again. "I can hear you grinning, you know. What the fuck is so funny?"

Nothing, you assure her. Absolutely nothing at all. But yeah, you'll meet her there. You were just about to say the same thing, before she beat you to it.

"Is that right? Well, that's..." There's an awkward pause here, on your Equerry's end, as if she herself is a bit dumbstruck by that fact. "...Nevermind. I'll be right there, give or take a couple of minutes. Have to go get ready and everything."

Not a problem, you respond. But as she makes to hang up, you call her attention again.

"Yeah? What is it now?"

You grin again, and remind her that it's 'Warmaster Murderface', not just 'Murderface'.

"Hah!" Sayaka barks. "Fine, fine. Later, Warmaster Noodles."

There's a click as your Equerry disconnects the call, leaving you to frown at your smartphone screen. ...You deserved that. You fucking walked right into it.

Anyway. You leave your Office a few moments later, wearing the hat of your office and your Golden Desert Eagle visibly holstered on your person. You decided to forgo the greatcoat for now, leaving it draped on your chair - sure, you're official and everything, but there's no need to bandy it around too much. The hat's more than enough at the moment.

Oh, and you shouldn't forget the Golden Bracelets around your wrists, hidden underneath your costume's sleeves. ...Probably a good thing you're bringing them along, too, considering that it was Lucius herself who put Yuu out of action for quite a while. You wonder how the spirit would react in the prisoner's presence.

That aside, you get to the main elevator quickly enough - the corridors deserted with the exception of a couple of mundane employees rushing here and there, clutching paperwork in their hands. And just like how you told her to, the hardsuit-clad form of Yuma is there waiting for you. Her skulled helm turning to face you as she rips off a textbook salute.

You make to return the salute, but a low, leopard-wet growl erupts in your mind, making you stop in your tracks in the sudden migraine-pain of it.

+ MIND. BREAKER. + Murderface seethes, her words a jagged avalanche of rusty blades. + DECEIVER. +

FUCK, that hurt!...What? What's she talking about? Mindbreaker? Deceiver? ...Who, Yuma? But she--

+ DO. NOT. TRUST. HER. + The armored fragment growls again, her words ending with the same desperation as a cornered animal. Desperate, near death, yet still dangerous. + NOW. I. REMEMBER. BE. CAREFUL. +

...The fuck? Alright, what the hell is this all about? What, is she hung over too? Does it work that way? Or is this some kind of cryptic warning bullshit you'll have to write down in your journal again, because--

...The fuck? Alright, what the hell is this all about? What, is she hung over too? Does it work that way? Or is this some kind of cryptic warning bullshit you'll have to write down in your journal again, because--

+ ASK. HER. YOURSELF. + The most twisted of your reflections has always sounded angry, but not like this. This wasn't anger - this was full-on hatred. + ASK. HER. ABOUT. WALPURGISNACHT. +

But you don't even remember that! You just know that a lot of people died in it, including Malal, and--

"Warmaster?" Yuma's vox-corrupted voice snaps you out of your one-sided argument with the voices in your head. You blink - and it's here that you realize that the Culexus is now right in front of you, waving a gloved hand in front of your face. "Everything okay? You just suddenly zoned out there for a second."

How do you respond?

[]It's fine. I'm fine. Just hung over. How's Lucius?
[]Ignore her concern, ask to be taken directly to Lucius' Silent Room. You don't have time to waste thinking about the voices in your head, and their fits of paranoid insanity.

You shake your head, making a show of massaging your temple with your knuckles. ...You're fine, you tell the Culexus. Everything's fine. Just a hangover that you've got under control making its presence felt, that's all. How's Lucius?

Yuma is silent for a couple of moments, seemingly staring at you from behind the heavily-tinted visor of her Anima Speculum - before she shrugs and hands you what appears to be a letter, still sealed in a plain white envelope. The envelope has no stamps, nor any identifying marks of any kind. Not even a return address.

The Culexus ignores your questioning look at the envelope as she replies, all warmth in her voice erased by her helm's vox-speakers. "Lucius is in her Silent Room, Warmaster, restrained and prepared for interrogation. Surprisingly cooperative, considering how much she'd tried to break her way out ever since we checked her in. I have her Soul Gem with me, by the way." Yuma holds up a red Soul Gem, in its jewel form - and she offers this to you, too.

You take the bauble from the Culexus' gloved hand and place it in your Inventory. Back at the stadium, you yourself ripped it off of the Eversor's corpse, her skull reduced to pulped meat and bone by repeated kill-shots of your Desert Eagle. ...You still remember how deliciously cathartic that felt, after what felt like an eternity of idol babysitting.

Well, anyway, it seems Lucius is doing well enough, for a prisoner. You're actually looking forward to talking with her, see what this is all about.

The main elevator opens with a pleasant 'ding', the car empty and silent - and both you and your Culexus Rank Leader step into it, the doors whooshing close behind you. Yuma pokes at the floor select panel, and soon the lift is moving, bringing you down to the lower floors as you carefully worry at the envelope's seal. Down, down.

"I still think it's a trap, but I don't think you need me to remind you of that, Warmaster." Yuma says after a moment. "And I'd like it very much if you give that back to me after you read its contents. The sender has been very particular that it be destroyed after you read it."

What, this? You wave the half-opened envelope at her. ...Who sent it, anyway? And what's with all the Mission Impossible shit? This isn't illegal or anything, is it?

"Not illegal, Warmaster, just complicated." Yuma shakes her head. "But I would like to follow that order to the letter, at least. I did promise."

+ BULL. SHIT. + Murderface roars in your mind, making you wince. + YOU. CAN'T. FOLLOW. ORDERS. TO. SAVE. YOUR. WORTHLESS. LIFE. +

You pointedly ignore the fragment's ravings and open the envelope, pulling out the letter inside. It's typewritten, but signed with a careful, neat hand.

>Dear Warmaster Matsuda,

>On behalf of the Seventeenth Officio Assassinorum, I would like to extend our sincerest congratulations regarding your recent promotion. I have no doubts that you will serve your Officio well and continue its proud legacy.

>Regrettably, we are not currently able to send a delegate to attend your ratification ceremony in person. Our Officio is, unfortunately, no longer in a position to act openly and the list of people we can trust grows shorter by the day. Nevertheless, our Officios have a strong rapport and I would be remiss to let our friendship fade with Valnikov. Hopefully we will be able to meet face-to-face in the future, when circumstances are more favourable. Until that time, I would humbly request that you not speak of this letter to anyone.

>Sincerely,

>Odette Brighton
>Warmaster of the Seventeenth Officio

>PS: We have heard that you are fond of whisky and syrup, of which we have in great abundance and quality. You should receive a gift in the mail within in the next few days. Good hunting, Warmaster.

Huh. The...Seventeenth Officio? You don't...hmm. Ah, wait. Canadians. Yeah. That explains the overly-polite tone of the message. Nice of them to send a gift, though, even though they couldn't attend.

You read the message again. ...Hmm. Something serious going down in the Seventeenth, seems like. Or maybe they're getting into some sort of quarrel with another Officio?

You ask this to Yuma, who shrugs again. "I was only told to deliver the letter to you personally, Warmaster, but...I'd hazard it's something like that. It's usually one or the other, if an Officio suddenly becomes withdrawn and overprotective of its own secrets."

+ LIAR. DECEIVER. MINDBREAKER. DIE IN SHAME. DIE IN FLAMES. SUFFER. +

...Christ, whatever Yuma did, she'd made Murderface angry enough to speak in full sentences.

What the hell did this kid do to make your doomed future self so fucking mad?

+ ASK. HER. I KEEP TELLING YOU. +

You shake your head again, shutting her out. Maybe later. Not now. Not when you have a prisoner to interrogate.

You let out a sigh of relief as Murderface seems to grow quiet at your rebuke - and it's here that you see Yuma holding out her hand again.

"The letter, Warmaster? If you've finished reading it?"

How do you react?

[]Give her the letter. You'll just have to ask Kyuubey about it later, seems like.
[]Keep the letter. You'll dispose of it yourself.
[]Ask about Lucius' state of mind, and see if Yuma has any recommendations about interrogating a prisoner with something to hide.

You decide to keep the letter instead of handing it over to Yuma.

"But Warmaster--" The Culexus starts, and for a moment you hear the old, hard-bitten Yuma that you first met when you called that meeting with your Rank Leaders, to discuss the Prophet. The Yuma that didn't hesitate socking you a good one in the gut when you baited her into reacting. And in that moment, you expected her to do something stupid, like rip the letter from your hands or something.

She doesn't. Instead, she simply holds out her gloved hand again, her voice carefully controlled, but tighter. Much tighter. "I must insist, Warmaster. It's important--"

If it's that important, then you'll see to it personally, you tell the Culexus, as you stuff the envelope into your own inventory. You'll be the one to destroy the letter. Probably burn it in your ashtray, and then flush the ashes down. That should be enough, right? That should satisfy the Seventeenth's paranoia, yeah?

"...I suppose so, Warmaster." Yuma says after a long while, lowering her arm. "Please keep in mind not to forget about it."

You won't. You'll even write it down in your own journal, you tell her. ...And you do just that, making sure she sees you writing. "Updated my journal," You say proudly, while underlining 'Ask Yuma about Walpurgisnacht later: Murderface mad as hell, ask why'.

As the elevator continues its way down to the Silent Room floors, it's here that you ask the Culexus beside you about Lucius' frame of mind. It's a handy thing to know about a prisoner you're about to visit, especially if you're about to interrogate them.

"...Peaceful," Yuma says after a moment. "Like I said, Warmaster, very cooperative. She's even started eating on her own, instead of the wardens having to force it down her throat. Even started talking to the wardens themselves like they're people, instead of worms and insects."

She turns towards you, the skull painted on her helmet leering. "I don't like it."

Why? It sounds like an improvement.

"It's too sudden, Warmaster. Too contrasting to her earlier attitude. It's as if she suddenly accepted the fact that she's never going to leave the Officio alive. Like she's accepted death." The Culexus shakes her head. "That in itself should be a warning already, and a clear indicator that she's planning something."

Huh. Well. In that case, then...does she have any suggestions on how to interrogate someone like that? Seems like Yuma's got experience--

+ SOULLESS. WARP-BORN. FILTH. I SHOULD HAVE TAKEN YOUR SKULL WHEN I HAD THE CHANCE--+

With a grunt of effort, you mentally block out Murderface's ravings again. Yuma doesn't seem to notice, this time, seemingly taking your question into serious consideration.

"I would start, Warmaster, by asking her just what exactly she wants from you." She says finally. "She'll be expecting you to tell her what YOU want from her, and what you're prepared to do to take it. That would catch her off guard, I think, even in her current mental state."

That...well. That actually sounds like a smart suggestion. You'll keep it in mind, then. You thank her for it.

Yuma falls silent again. "...No need to thank me, Warmaster." She says quietly, if a bit awkwardly.

With that, the rest of the trip to Lucius' Silent Room is made in silence. A bit more of a walk, and soon you find yourself in front of the room where the Magical Girl that had tried to kill you in a stadium full of people is currently imprisoned. The guards stationed - two Eversors whose names you don't quite catch, but nonetheless impress you with how alert and awake they look - give you a unified salute, their blades sheathed but ready to draw in a moment's notice.

"Here, I'm here! Sorry I'm late!" A voice comes up from behind you, and you turn to see that it's none other than your Equerry, her cape billowing out behind her as she approaches in a run. The guards immediately stand straighter at her presence, faces locking into that frozen look of fierce desperation in the face of a very strict superior officer. "What did I miss?"

Nothing much, really, you tell the blue-haired Eversor, as she gives the guards a critical once-over. You just got here with Yuma, after all.

"Costume's wrinkled. Ten demerits, Kitchen duty for two weeks." Sayaka points at one of the guards, then at the other. "You. Twenty demerits for not making sure your sentry partner's costume is up to par. Kitchen duty for a month."

"Ma'am!" Both Eversors stand straighter in terrified acquiescence. Your Equerry nods, and turns back to you. "Yeah? Well, I guess I wasn't that late after all." Sayaka replies, before nodding again, this time to the Culexus beside you. "Kyoko says hi, not that you care, obviously."

"...I care," Yuma replies, in the meekest, most apologetic voice you'd ever heard her speak in. "...Please say hi to Miss Kyoko, too." The blue-haired Eversor simply narrows her eyes at this, saying nothing.

...Well. Uh. So, about Lucius...?

"Yeah, I'm getting to that." Sayaka says after a while. "Anyway, there's only room for three people in a Silent Room, and that's counting the prisoner inside. If we're going to start this interrogation, you have to pick who you're bringing in along with you."

You blink at this. ...You didn't really think about that, you just thought Sayaka would be here waiting for you outside while you interrogated Lucius. You went in solo with Midori, didn't you?

"This is this and that is that," Sayaka frowns. "Let's be honest, Murderface, the only thing Midori can kill is a pint of ice cream. Lucius is something else. Even with the Silent Room on and her restraints active, she's still a well-trained Eversor." Your Equerry shakes her head. "I can't let you go in there alone, so you have to pick who you're bringing in with you. Me, or Yuma."

...Well. Seems you have to make a choice, here.

Who do you pick to accompany you with Lucius' interrogation?

True. However, that doesn't tell the full story cat. First off, besting a pint of ice cream is something the vast majority of even regular people can manage, much less superhumans like meguca. As such, specifying that Midori could do it does not in any way inform Chiaki of Midori's abilities; the reason for its mention must necessarily be different.

Bringing us to the second point: Sayaka didn't merely claim Midori would be capable of scarfing down the ice cream, she specifically claimed it as the ONLY thing she could 'kill'. Obviously an insult in its own right, however when paired with the auspicious choice of ice cream - a dessert commonly associated with gaining weight - rather than, say, a bowl of noodles which would be far more relevant as well, the logical conclusion is indeed that she meant to cast aspersions on Chiaki's waifu.

As a journalist, surely you should be able to reason through this, cat?

I had hoped desperately that my nerves would let up once the Voices Around the World concert was over – at very least, I had hoped that being in my element, finally performing again for the first time in what seemed like ages, would help me relax, ease me back into my life.

It hadn't, naturally. That was the direction my life had taken since…since Yayoi, and in retrospect, I wasn't sure why I expected it to stop.

She went out of her way to torture me. If the producer hadn't reassured me time and time again that the whole event had been planned months in advance (which, admittedly, I still find it a little hard to believe), I would have started to suspect that Ruri set it up specifically to make me miserable.

First, there was the twenty-four hour broadcast, which she seemed determined to drag me into as much as possible. Of course, I've never had trouble in front of a camera before, and it wasn't the first time I'd been under the spotlight for an extended period even behind the scenes, but she seemed determined to go out of her way to put me on the spot, to humiliate me around every turn, to hammer the idea that we'd become best friends into the minds of our – no, her – fans.

…I played along. Even when she brought…HER, of all people, on staff, I played along. Even when she had HER shadow us at every turn, when she showed me up in front of HER over and over, I smiled and I took it without complaint.

Even when she pushed us into talking, into exchanging awkward platitudes after…after the coffee shop – which seemed to be all anyone ELSE was interested in talking about – Ruri smiled the same, vapid smile, and acted like this must have been exactly what I wanted.

I drew the line at the concert itself, and I was so, so relieved when our companies agreed to cancel the second half.

It wasn't because my life was put on the line yet again because of her…because of Chiaki-san. …I wasn't afraid. I knew she'd protect me. Protect everyone. I don't believe she likes to admit it, but that's the kind of person she is. No, it's…

It shouldn't have been such a big deal. It shouldn't have stuck with me as much as it did. But under recent circumstances…

For the third time that day I scrubbed at my lips with a paper towel. The concert was days ago, and already this had become a sort of unhealthy little ritual, every time I got a break. I could still feel a gentle, uncomfortable warmth, could still taste peppermint lip gloss. The kiss was not in the script. It was not in the script at all – it was, in fact, expressly against my contract with 2020. No excessive physical contact, the producers had both agreed it was reasonable.

…They tasted raw, and if my reflection was to be believed, they were turning an unhealthy, flushed red. I didn't need to be anywhere for the evening, thankfully, but I'd still have to put lipstick on at very, very least. Hopefully it wouldn't… hurt, or something. I hadn't had much experience with injuring my lips before.

…Stupid. It was so stupid to fixate on a stupid kiss. It was publicity. It was a show. The response was phenomenal. Chirpee exploded. Nobody believed it was real. Nobody even realized how surprised I was. Looking back on it, this sort of stupid stunt was exactly the kind of thing Ruri Kirishima would pull, and I should have expected it.

I pursed my lips and ran my tongue across them again. …It would go away on its own. I needed to stop trying to force it, it hadn't worked before after about ten thousand showers and it wasn't going to work now. At least with Ruri it wasn't… …I wanted to think she didn't intend for it to be terrible. Maybe it would have been nice, in other circumstances.

Maybe.

I'd only had a few chances to meet her, and I wasn't necessarily unhappy about that. Her voice had a piercing, nasal quality to it, and every time I'd met her she seemed to be absolutely furious about something or other.

…Even so, she seemed as though she was trying to keep a smile up, to force some small comfort. It gave me a terrible feeling of foreboding, and the bundle of clothing she shoved in my arms only confirmed my suspicions.

"Minase." A heavy sweater, a long skirt, sunglasses and…a wig. "We're going incognito tonight. Try to look cheap."

We sat in relative silence as rain pounded on the beat-up little car I had been dragged into, casting the city into shades of distant, oppressive gray. It was the Mitakihara from those days, only a few weeks ago. The Mitakihara that refused to be hidden behind brilliant lights and empty songs of love. It was her Mitakihara tonight, and my heart ached a little as I wondered what she was doing.

Probably shooting up a warehouse of mafiosos, drunk two-thirds stupid on her own misery. …Did the rain make her feel lonely, too? I caught myself sighing as I leaned on the icy-cold window. The stupid wig itched. The stupid sweater itched. Maki – that was her name, Maki – had sworn up and down that she hadn't let that awful little sweat-demon near them, but the pins that kept my hair from spilling out of the week were jabbing into my scalp.

A choice string of irritated German snapped me out of my reverie of self-pity, along with the dim realization that the radio had been switched off a few bars into…I don't know her name. Some other 2020 idol's honey-voiced rendition of an old Frank Sinatra song.

"Not a fan, I take it," I murmured. It was a welcome interruption to drowning in thoughts about you-know-who.

"I've heard it about fifteen million times too many. You will too, I promise." …Come to think of it, this was one of those songs that tended to be playing at all hours inside the 2020 Pro building. I hadn't thought much of it. "It helps Wondergirl relax," she added, as though that explained everything.

A few minutes passed in silence, and when I found my mind drifting toward you-know-who again, I turned to Maki instead.

"So what is all this about, exactly?" After a moment, I added, "I have a handgun in my purse, if this is some plan to bump off the competition. Don't think I won't do it." I grit my teeth as the car filled with an uproar of laughter. Apparently every single thing Maki Wakahisa whatever-it-was did was loud.

"Don't make me laugh when I'm trying to drive, damn it." The superior smirk she flashed me convinced me of something I hadn't been entirely certain of yet: I hate everyone at 2020 Pro. Every single person. All of them. For that moment I hoped that I could scowl so hard at Wakahisa that it might crash the car and kill…her.

Just her.

"…God, you're pissier than Ruri. I get it, you're still freaked out. That's fine, whatever. Do you even know how to use it?"

"Yes," I snapped. "I've been shooting for longer than YOU'VE been sitting in Ruri Kirishima's shadow, Miss Wakahisa." The both of us jerked violently as she slammed on the brakes, a dark look crossing her face. The car behind us honked furiously as it screeched to a halt, and I could see her fingers digging furiously into the wheel. She stared over at me with brilliant, burning blue eyes, and I crossed my arms and stared evenly back. After a deep breath, we started moving again and she murmured another string of scathing German.

"Say what you like about my father, but I've never been fond of being called a whore." I could scarcely keep the smug smile off of my face. I really try not to indulge in things like this often, but it was nice having someone who responded with something other than a vapid laugh, like one you'd give a child.

"You fuckers deserve each other," she hissed.

Another couple of tense minutes passed before either of us spoke. Against all common sense, it was me; I probably would have apologized, probably SHOULD have apologized, but for one moment I didn't feel like I was being…well, shit on. And I missed that desperately.

"So what is all of this incognito nonsense for, again? You never specified." Maki gave me a dangerous glare from the corner of her eye, then seemed to resign herself to my continued existence.

"Wondergirl didn't feel safe abroad," she started, insincerity dripping from each word like grease from Karasawa's hair, "so she started whining to Mr. P. We sent out a body double this morning, and she sent for her best friends to pick her up at the airport."

Best…yes. Sure. Of course.

"Get used to it. While you're working with 2020, you're Kirishima's bitch. Just be glad you're one of her 'best friends' and not one of the dozens girls she's crushing under her silky green heel." I opened my mouth for a rebuttal, but Maki continued louder. "And unless you WANT to be one of those dozens of girls, you get to share the same shit sandwich as Karasawa and me, and you're going to take a big fucking bite, and you're going to smile. And if you don't, then you'll get another sandwich, and you'll take another, even bigger bite, and you'll smile wider until Ruri – and, by proxy, Mr. P – is satisfied."

"…Am I always going to die a little bit inside when I think about it?"

"It's a shit sandwich, Minase. What do YOU think?"

Wakahisa’s charming metaphor still rang in my ears an hour and a half later as the three of us huddled around a small table in front of some cheap chain ice cream parlor, doing our best to ignore the two security teams mere tables away.

Ruri had immediately dug into a monstrous pile of mint, atrocities of flavor all mixed together in a pile large enough to kill a six-year-old. Maki opted for a more classical triple-fudge bowl with wafers sticking out if it and one of those names that implies one will be wheeled out on a stretcher from a chain of violent heart attacks.

I got two scoops of French vanilla and wondered how badly it would destroy my diet. Honestly, Hatachikawa-san really let the idols in 2020 run away with every inch he gave them, didn’t he? I wondered idly if they did this kind of thing all the time. …And if they were more toned than I was. There was no way to look without being awkward, and even if I tried, Ruri would probably grab my hand and hold it to her stomach until one of us called the police.

“I really missed this. It’s been way too long,” Ruri sighed with a little smear of green on the edge of her lip. Her tongue darted out a half-moment later to nab it, and Maki made a face.

“It’s been a week. A week and a half, tops.” Her reply was flat and cold as she slipped a delicate spoonful of chocolate into her mouth. I…had not expected 2020 Pro’s top S-idol to be the graceful one of the two. “And you were in Paris, right? So how many pastries did you sneak onto the plane? How many did you eat on the way over?”

“Maki-channn, you knowww my batteries run on sugarrr. And that’s not even what I meannnt!” Ruri’s whine was as distinct as ever, though she managed to keep it down to a low sulk. I was…honestly impressed that she’d managed ‘incognito’ as well as – if not better than – Maki and me.

When we’d gone to pick her up, I expected the usual bombastic lack of subtlety from her, but…well, I didn’t even see her until Maki snorted and waved her over. Her hair was lazily tied back, soft and clean-looking but not out of the ordinary, and without her usual makeup and fashion…sensibilities…she looked like she might have been a touch older than me, actually. Even the way she’d waved us down was gentle and reserved.

‘…Don’t give me that look, Iori-chan,’ she’d said. ‘You’re not even a performer if you can’t act at least this much.’

“So did you get any recording done while I was gone, Iori-chan?” She must have noticed me doing my best to ignore them. “Mr. P said it was kind of rough on you, doing it without a partner.”

The truth of it was, it HAD been rough. It wasn’t my first foray into voice-acting, but as much as I hated to admit it, Ruri lent the entire project a certain energy and momentum when we were working together, something that Hatachikawa-san had noted was missing when I tried to record on my own. …It wasn’t quite as fun to sit there in a booth alone, either, as obnoxious as Ruri could be.

…It really had been kind of a lonely week, and the realization killed me just a little inside. I glanced to Maki, who was giving me a sort of sympathetic look of all things. Almost pitying. It made the hair on the back of my neck stand on end, and I murmured that I was fine.

“…Iori-chan. Look…” Ruri stared down into her ice cream bowl and fiddled with her spoon. “We’ve kind of commandeered a lot of your life lately, and I know I…well, I wasn’t really…” Her expression turned pensive as she stirred her mint-bomination.

“…Right. I was wr… …Some of the things I did were…umm…”

“Say it.” I didn’t exactly mean for it to come out with the force that it did, and it left the both of them silent for a moment. I continued.

“Say you were wrong. Admit to me, right here, that you were stalking me during one of the worst periods of my life. That you were harassing me – torturing me – because you assumed I didn’t understand how serious the situation with…with Matsuda-san could get. Of course I understood. I was there when she saved me from being…” Don’t lose momentum. Say it. Just say it. “…gang-raped and quite possibly murdered for a bunch of…a bunch of disgusting perverts. For a bunch of…amoral fucking deviants.”

“Iori-chan…“ The shock on her face was obvious, and it made my heart flutter. Maki seemed to be holding back a laugh.

“And I am not your…your ACCESSORY. I’m not biting into your stupid sandwich. You are not my best friend, you will NEVER be my best friend, and stop trying to replace her. She’s only been…been gone for two months. Have a little fucking shame.” I kept my voice as low as I could, forced myself to take a breath, to end it there before I got too carried away. Before she started crying because someone actually called her out.

…I felt bad for exploding, later on. It occurred to me that she probably was trying to apologize. That maybe she already knew what she did wrong.

“She’s got you dead to rights, Wondergirl.” …but I didn’t feel that bad, and Maki was doing everything she could not to laugh. Ruri’s aqua-green eyes bored into me, a storm of emotion brewing behind them.

One of the most valuable things I had come to learn when dealing with other idols: do not break eye contact. Do not back down. Not for a second. At 765, we were something close to a family, for the most part. Other companies were not so kind. 2020 was certainly not. I slipped a spoonful of half-melted French vanilla into my mouth. It tasted like victory. A small victory, but victory nonetheless.

“…I can end your career in a phone call, Minase,” she started, quietly. Supposedly, it was true, but it was a large claim to boast. Whether it was the ice cream, mental exhaustion, or the fact that I snapped just a little bit that day, I felt lucky. “You can apologize if you want. I’m listening.”

I took another spoonful, then another, as Ruri stared me down, as Maki forced down a roar in her chest. I vaguely suspected that I’d been set up. That Wakahisa’s big speech before was something she made just to try and send me over the tipping point. I realized that right then, I cared more about finishing my ice cream than about how angry Ruri Kirishima was.

I was nearly done when one of us finally broke the silence. It was me, of course.

“Your ice cream is melting, Ruri-chan~” I pushed it out in the most sickly sweet tone I could imagine. Frankly, I was mocking her. Her face was stretched into a distant, predatory smile.

“That’s all you have to say?”

“You know what? Yes. That’s all. That’s it.” One last bite, and I gingerly nudged my bowl away. “Make your phone call. Find another Murder Mayumi. It isn’t worth the indignity anymore.”

Then she did the last thing I expected. …Her cold smile melted away into a sheepish one, and she scratched idly at the back of her neck.

“…I’m sorry, Iori-chan.” As Ruri spoke, I heard Maki’s spoon hit the table. Apparently she dropped it.

She…what?

I’ve done the same thing to Mappi-chan before, it’s like…I get this THING where I…you know, you kind of get it, right?” I shook my head, and she sighed. “I try to help people but there are some personality types that like…they just set off this NEED to mess with people. I guess it’s what I really like about you, that you’re…you know? Like this. But you’re not scary like Maki, either. You’re…”

“I’m…?” I had no idea how to react.

“You’re really cute, Iori-chan!” She blurted it out, a tinge of red crossing her face. “I really, definitely want to be your friend! I was trying but I got everything mixed up. I’m really, really sorry. Maki tried to tell me I was really messing things up, but I ignored her-“

“Again.”

“-so I really hope we can keep working together, okay?”

…It was exactly what I needed to hear, right then. I think…that was what she wanted. I think that was her whole idea. Maybe something she’d been building up to for weeks.

But maybe I’m just paranoid.

+++PANNA: Let's begin. To sum up, this morning, you have been assigned a highest priority mission. What was it?

+++MARTINA: To retire the Warmaster.
+pause+
I understand it was because she had reached the point of not being sustainable anymore. As always, it was requested that I let her become a Witch, and kill her only then. But the previous one had tried to fight me four months ago, and escaped, so, I think, that would be why it"s retiring, rather than purging or hunting.

+++JARMILA: Oh yes. This is going to be good.

+++P: How did you feel about this?

+++M: Hmm.
+pause+
I was scared. Obviously I would be, having to fight the Warmaster, but don't forget I had no idea who the Warmaster even was yesterday, and the file that I had received was... well, intimidating.
+pause+
I'd like to ask this too, why should I of all people have the necessary ability to assassinate the Warmaster?

+++P: That would be, firstly, because the Love Potion deteriorates the soul, so at the time she would need a Grief Seed every day and wouldn't be worth sustaining anymore, you will be fighting a shade of her former self anyway.

+++J: Wow. That's fucked up.
+pause+

+++P: Secondly, Martina, because you're the least unreliable powerful person around, and the best at engaging humans. You may remember that Jarmila had to hunt down the Witch resulting from your blunder the last time, because she's better suited to battle Witches than you.

+++M: +loudly+ Except that girl back then shot magic at me from her Gem even after I've broken everything in her body except that, so I don't think it was possible-

+++P: Maintain your trance. Besides, we got the Witch, so it wasn't too bad. How did you approach the assignment?

+++M: Well.
+pause+
I've learned something from the last one. This time, I've brought a gun. Her file had said she was a powerful teleporter, able to travel hundreds of miles. I can see why such a person would get the job of cleaning the Witches as they turn up. But it also meant that she could teleport on me any time. So, I had no idea what to do about it. I would have requested a Culexus to help me, if we still had any, but we didn't manage to recruit one in, how long? Ten years? I would have actually even requested foreign assistance on this one, if it wasn't so confidential. No way I could really prepare for this. Not even anything I can make with a marker seemed useful.

+++P: She could probably make a short jump, but then we could just get her again. Karolina must have known that she would Witch out right away, if she tried to jump between countries in her state. Someone else would then get the Seed, or we would have to ask for turf access, or even actual assistance, sure. That would be troublesome. At her peak, however, and with the potion's help, even jumping from here to Australia wouldn't be out of question.

+++M: So... I have asked Řeřicha for a seeing. She looked at me with those bloodshot eyes of hers, and said she couldn't help on a short notice like that, but that some acolyte girl had said she saw me talking to a platinum blonde warrior during a divination. That was a week ago, if I remember what Řeřicha said right.

So, I'll rub this in. It would be better if I didn't have to ask. Why isn't there some sort of a system for these yet? We should gather notices like this, I saw some random shit in the warp myself, what do you know, it could help somebody if I shared back then.

+++P: Too dangerous. Could be used as a way to circumvent classification. The person that tries to make sense of these would need to have access to everything, otherwise they wouldn't be able to judge who is allowed to be warned about what. The Incubator certainly does not have time for that, and neither do I.

+++TOYEN: I guess that means the burden of power is biting you in the ass, eh?

+++M: It also turned out to be the right thing to do. When I met the Warmaster at the given place, I've tried to approach her more casually, and she sort of started talking on her own.

+++J: Sorry for jumping in, this seems like a good time. Karolina Sokołowska? Kája? A teleporting Eversor? Long blonde hair? I've trained that nerd.
+short pause+
So she was the Warmaster for the last months? That's sort of hard to believe, though, I guess, the Potion goes a long way. Give me a moment here, to get it all together.
+pause+
I remember that girl alright. Her name was Karolina, but she insisted for people to not call her by her full name. That she hates it. It's a really common and boring one, I guess. She was a teleporter Eversor, which was awesome, but she was also dreadfully lacking in, well, curiosity. A slow learner. And pretty dumb, all in all. It took me days to explain to her the idea of using teleportation to attack somebody. Just, you know, popping up behind them and shanking their guts.

I think I just sort of stopped seeing her a few weeks after she got in, and assumed she got killed somewhere off my eyes, Jackdaw took what was left, and Panna had filled the paperwork. I mean, she was supposed to be an operative of her own because of the gimmick, but at the same time, she wasn't so promising a recruit that I'd lose sleep over her. Damn.
+pained expression+
You said you'd talked, so did she say anything interesting?

+++M: Yes, she talked a lot - right when she teleported in. It's auditive memory, rather than the visual which I trained for, but I remember it all. To establish the scene better for you - I was told by the Incubator to meet her in an alley in the Old Town, right at the dawn. Don't know how that works. Did you, like, order her to come get shot?

+pause+

Let's see, a swearword here and there:

"Haha, the place is right now, but time still fucked. Sorry I'm late. Had to kill a monster, except he was a guy. Really wanted to do it for the longest fucking time, and she can't punish me when I'm dead, you dig?" +accent, some elongated vowels+

She was also all bloody and transformed. She held a stained sword. I am afraid I can't tell swords apart like Jarmila would, but it looked very simple and heavy. She had a costume out of hard leather. Tomboyish, like a fashionable fencer. A lot of studs, a very Twelfth looking costume.

+++J: By the way, except for the costume, that sounds nothing like her. She was really phlegmatic and, hm, timid.

+++P: It is her. Consider the love potion's withdrawal effects too. Her psychological profile also has her as bipolar, in case you didn't know. She had also expressed actual concern that you would find out, when she was offered the spot. I would be forbidden to tell you anyway, and wouldn't. Just so this is said here, she seemed to have arranged some sort of a trade with the Incubator, that I didn't see into.

Which is my point. Midori is maybe slightly pudgy and soft, so the repeated "fat" comments are either 1) Midori being overtly self-conscious or 2) People taking a dig at Chiaki indirectly.

Personally, my mental image is that she's rather curvy with, as I said before, "fat in all the right places" which gives her a slightly heavier look. Definitely heavier than Chiaki.

I have been trying to make her more... weighty in my drawings as of late, and I think I've reached a pretty nice point? I don't know, but I think they're pretty close to my mental image of the character, at least.

+++T: Wow, that almost sounds like she's the winner. That's much better than what most girls around here get. Most just make a wish, and kind of randomly witch out a month later. Wink wink, nudge nudge, you know.

+++P: He seemed to treat it as a second contract, and would be willing grant a second wish for it in a way, as long as it was reasonable. It's the difference between letting someone fiddle with your soul, and letting him break it.

+++M: "It's a lot harder to just cap me like this, without a fight, in cold blood, eh? I get it, I get. You kill a lot of people, but they're always shooting at you first or stopping you from doing your job or some shit. Noow, here's something for you to think about. Magical girls kill monsters, right? And people are shit, soo they are sometimes monsters. So that's why they have us kill people. Got no problem with that. Here's the thing though: You don't get monsters. Aah, fuck, I am saying it wrong. Basically a monster is shit you don't understand. If you can look at the werewolf, he fucking sucks at his job. +fast+ Isn't killing shit JUST because you don't understand it kind of being a massive cunt though? "Yeaah, that's the word. Anyway, it's why the Librarians are really evil as shit. They use your fear to have you kill them, and that's alright, but they also ask you questions so they can understand them. It's the closest you can get to really murdering them. There's stalking somebody and killing them which is wrong but human after all, and then there's killing somebody and THEN stalking them, and I can't fucking understand that. I've just stabbed a guy's heart five minutes ago, and it was less fucked up than what they do every day. I've killed him because I hated him, but they kill them because they want to love them. Like I say, fucked up. Well, good to have gotten this out of my head.

No, really, though, what are you waiting for? It's right here on my finger. You're aiming at my chest, that won't do shit. "

I am actually only supposed to kill you as a magical girl if you go crazy before your time runs out. They want your witch flesh - I've told her the truth.

It seemed to sadden her. "That's a shame. I've wanted to meet the pink girl and ask her some shit. But fuck if I remember what it was anymore."

I hear you meet her anyway. The Librarians say she's around the deaths of both Magical Girls and Witches.

"Cool. Tell Jarmila I chose this, and tell Panna she's a bitch. There. If I could have a second go at life I'd swear a lot more, because it fucking doesn't matter. Kurwa."

And then she witched out.

+++M: Metal.
+pause+
It was like a castle top, with a lot of towers. Isn't there already an important Witch that has a castle for a barrier? Like, an alpha?

+++J: That would be Libuna, the Witch of Harvest. She's a pretty big deal. But she's not really an alpha. Just old, and generally really weird. The Librarians ramble about her a lot, alongside the other bit more legendary ones - like the Walpurgisnacht party.

>>35177136
+++M: Yeah, that one. Well, this one had a labyrinth of rooftops and walkways and bridges. The towers were like crossroads. It had great visibility.

+pause+

Now, there were a lot of ropes and wires between the towers, those were basically the Barrier's ceiling, and this is where it gets freaky. It used organs and tendons for decoration. A lot of blood dripping on you all the time and gore lying everywhere, the sidewalks that you could stand on were all bloody. A lot of it was sticking out of the tower windows, too. It didn't look anything like in a biology handbook, just a bloody mess.
+pause+
A bit under the ropes, and everywhere surrounding where you could really stand, would be the webs. They looked like they were made of some kind of mucus. Really sticky. Maybe that's how all webs look really up close, though. I saw that in the TV once. These webs were in a lot of colors, didn't look like spider webs at all. When I talk about moving through the Barrier, those were the walls, and I would walk on the sidewalks and stairways between the towers alongside them. The bridges themselves were really dangerous, I was afraid of slipping on all the blood, so I couldn't really run after her very fast.
+short pause+
Did I forget to say anything? Hmm, yes. Smooth ground, no cat head pavement or anything of the sort. The towers had windows, gore sticking out of them. You couldn't get into any. The only exception was the central tower where I've initially appeared, that had a bit of an empty space. And there were only more webs down bellow, with no real ground for all I know.

I got a bit ahead of myself. The first thing that I saw was her Witch form. She looked like huge fat ass spider, but also had tentacles for hair, so who knows what she was supposed to be. She had a stinger too, but she never got anywhere close to touching me with it, so I guess it doesn't matter.

I found out right away that was that she was immune to my regular javelins. The one I threw off the bat just stuck to her for a bit, and then clattered on the ground - no good. Even the normal ones I just create to throw are still a magic weapon, so that hairy skin of her must have been really thick. Or it might be the case that they are bad javelins because they're pencils, and that I am just too weak for fighting Witches, physically. I have to cheat with magic a lot every time I do, and so I did again.

I had prepared an enchanted bundle before the fight, and those did work. She caught one sparkly pencil to the belly, screamed, jumped at me, and fell right out of the tower as I've dodged to the side. The javelin broke as she rammed through the entrance, part of it remaining in, so even though it was a shallow hit compared to what I've hoped for, it was still lodged solidly.

The bad part was that I didn't have her cornered anymore, and had to chase her around.

It was an endurance fight. She didn't have the skill to hit me on her own, with her limbs or her butt, because she was so big. Two exchanges after I've caught up with her, and she never tried again. I guess she was obviously afraid of using her jaws, because it meant getting way too close to the spearhead.

So, instead, she would jump around and away, try to dodge what I threw, and try to drown me in Familiars. I became sick and tired of that pretty fast, the webs made her much more agile. A few of those throws, I've managed to actually miss, even when I only went for it when it looked safe. Also, she liked to pull the javelins out with the tentacles, and break them in her jaws. I've learned something for the future there, that only the spearhead - or the graphite, if you will - is what I really enchant. Breaking them was really smart of her. Still, the way she approached this gave me a lot of space to work my magic, which I usually don't get.
+pause+

I really took my time with her. It seemed she became scared of me. Due to that, she let me get away with writing four scrolls during the battle, part by part. I used each right away, so the bundle of ten that I had at the start slowly grew in lethality. I could always see where she and the Familiars were, after all, so I didn't have to worry about being ambushed. Writing one scroll only takes me a minute now, and each one I read is another brick wall that the javelin can pierce through. That's how easy she made it for me.

After returning back to the center and just doing my thing, the Familiars followed me in, so I just stabbed them away and kicked them off.

Her Familiars that would try to prevent me from making them, with not much success, were knights with winged helmets. They were very bad at their job, for being knights. There were already a few kinds of them, though. Isn't that a sign of a great Witch?

+++P: Yes. You still didn't say anything about them, were they spiders?

+++M: Shit. Sorry. Right. There were cocoons all over the place and they would burst out of them, but they weren't little spiders. They were white knights with butterfly wings and black knights with dragonfly wings, and they would show up in separate groups. Maybe the knight thing was just armor imagery, because they attacked with claws. Or they would try to to bull rush me off the stairs. I guess they didn't really have space to dogpile me, which is the more classic Familiar tactic. They always had a leader that had a horse-thing, and much bigger wings, but still no weapon - like I said, really varied Familiars.

I saw a few groups of them fighting when they couldn't get to me, but if they had a way, they would try to gang up on me first. Some of the ones that I'd push from a bridge or stairs got caught in the webs, too. I am afraid I really just took a quick stroll through the outside, before getting back at the start and just doing my thing.

+++P: Libuna's Familiars have moth wings. And they are skeletons. That's actually really interesting.

+++T: I heard that a few times. That you can meet them in different Barriers. That if you meet a random midget skeleton with moth wings, a torch, and some sort of a farming tool like a sickle, you should report it. And that it's a really ill omen for you or something.

+++J: Is that so. I've never seen one like that in my life.

+++P: Her Witch Kiss is also fairly famous. There used to be a cult that worshipped her, used it as it's crest.

+++M: Well, I didn't see any of those, either.
+pause+
I guess killing her wasn't any amazing feat. All I did was just enchanting the last two with my final scroll, which was where the marker went dry. I didn't want to blow a Grief Seed to make another, so I just went with what I had. Then I used one of them to nail her to the wall of the central tower, because she was just starting to creep on me from the outside.

[10/11]

>>35177245
I went around the tower to stab her with the final one - she was already breathing her last. There were already six holes in her, so I was confident, and it worked. Got her all the way through the jaws and beyond, then kicked it in for good measure. She took her time dying, but that was it. She was flailing around a lot, so I've expected her to try and to hold onto me with the tentacles. that would make it all messier. In the end, though, she didn't even try that.
+pause+

Also, she bled. Green blood that melted the castle wall I've pinned her to, but not the javelin itself. I took care not to get it on my hands.. Do Witches normally bleed?

+++J: Some do, yeah.

+++M: I am asking because I see through Witches too, and they're usually made of this black smokegoo thing on the inside. The blood seemed to come out of nowhere.
+pause+
Well, that's all. I can't carry corpses like Jarmila, so afterwards, I called up Jackdaw's girls, and they came for the body. It was three blocks to the nearest entrance into the underground. One of them was a Callidus, but even that way, it was risky as hell. They were lucky I could actually cover the path for them though, so just a few people would see them with the bag.
+pause+
Can I wake up now?

>>35177279
+++P: Two more things. Did you look into who she killed afterwards?

+++M: It happened five hours ago, so I didn't have time, neither did I care much. From what I could see through the city walls, there weren't any human corpses anywhere near by. I would notice something like that.

+++P: Did you have a chance to bring any of her flesh?

+++M: I've realized that you'll want that right as she was in her death throes, so I've tried to bring one of the knight things. Just jumped from the sidewalk to a bridge near by, next to a group of them. They weren't that dangerous, but the armor made them tricky to pick up. The one I've grabbed wasn't in my hand anymore when the Barrier had vanished.

+++J: Oh. Could the sucker have escaped? That would be bad. Sounds like it could grow into something dangerous.

Yes, she's so tall compared to Chiaki, but you draw her as REALLY tall compared to Chiaki and more or less only draw her with Chiaki. It's the same reason Wendy looks super tall (and even is in my mind) - she and Midori are both like 5'6, it's just that Chiaki tends to be viewed as tiny down at like 5'2 or 5'3.

MAGICAL GIRL NOIR QUEST
THE FALL OF CHIAKI MATSUDA

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 10/04/14(Sat)09:33:48 No.35299452 Archived

You choose Sayaka to accompany you inside Lucius' Silent Room. While Yuma would certainly be able to shut down the Eversor if she ever tried anything - her performance during Haruka's seeing certainly proved that - you feel just a bit more comfortable with your Equerry watching your back rather than the Culexus.

This also eliminates you getting distracted by another one of Murderface's sudden raging tantrums. The last outburst stung more painfully than anything your body's thrown at you - in fact, it still hurt even now, a dull ache throbbing slowly in the back of your eyes.

Another one of those during a crucial moment might be everything Lucius would need to turn an interrogation into a murder.

>>35299452

You voice your decision, and Yuma nods, taking Lucius' Soul Gem from a pocket somewhere in her hardsuit and offers it to you. If she was disappointed with your choice, she doesn't seem to show it - not that you could see her face through her visor, anyway.

"Understood, Warmaster." She says to you in a vox-corrupted murmur. "I'll be right here if you need me."

You nod in return, and just as you take Lucius' Soul Gem from her gloved hand - it's quickly replaced by a rather cute-looking character lunchbox, shaped after a pudgy green cat mascot.

"Your lunch." Sayaka withdraws her own gloved hand, her eyes still cold and narrowed at the stunned Culexus. "Kyoko made it for you. Again, not like you care." It's here that your Equerry turns to you and nods. "Come on, Murderface. Let's get this show on the road."

"...I do care," Yuma says again, her voice so low that even the vox speakers on her helmet is unable to rob it of emotion or warmth.

"Tell it to someone who gives a shit what you care about anymore, Culexus," Sayaka's reply could've been issued from an Anima Speculum for how cruel it sounded. "Now do your job, which you're lucky to have because everyone else who can is dead."

The Silent Room's door slams shut behind you as Sayaka ushers you across the treshold, removing any chance for the Culexus to reply. In front of you, at the end of a very short corridor, is another door - similar to the one you just passed by, but thicker. Obviously built to keep a more dangerous prisoner in.

"Silent Rooms for Eversors are basically two rooms in one," Your Equerry says, seeing your confusion. "Just in case the first one fails for some reason. This one in particular," she emphasizes by tapping her booted heel on the floor, "...is the back-up."

...Huh. Well, that's handy. But shouldn't the first door be just as reinforced as the second one, in that sense?

"Not necessarily. Any Eversor can easily rip this thing off its hinges, sure," Sayaka points towards the door the both of you just entered through. "But the Silent Engine here is on a different setting than the one keeping Lucius nice and frosty in there." She gestures towards the inner door.

How different?

"Well, for one, the moment the room detects that the prisoner's made it to this particular room without proper authorization, it activates at full, focused intensity." Your Equerry offers you a dark grin. "Enough that the prisoner's soul gem melts in its casing."

...

"Overkill, I know, but that's how it's always been. And no one's been able to break out of one ever since we had these constructed." Sayaka steps past you, towards what looks like a touchpad set into the corridor wall. She holds up her own Soul Gem to it, the bauble in her hand a startlingly-clear and blindingly-bright blue. The touchpad glows in unison, before beeping.

"Focus the Silent Room's effects on the prisoner only, please. The Warmaster and I are coming in for interrogation." Sayaka says aloud, as if speaking to the device in front of her.

"Compliance," a speaker set beside the touchpad responds in a mechanical voice.

"Well, here we are, then." Sayaka says as her Soul Gem manifests once more on her midriff. ...That always looked stupid to you, but you never thought of pointing it out. It's probably a sore point for your Equerry already. "Ready?"

How do you react?

[]Nod, and follow Sayaka inside. Time to get this interrogation started.
[]Are you naturally this much of a bitch, or did you have to work on it? Because you're starting to treat Yuma as if she answers to Murderface and has a drinking problem.
[]Ask Sayaka what she thinks about Lucius' trap, see if she has a plan of her own. It's important that the both of you know what to do before interrogating someone like Lucius, after all.

I actually wonder how other character would react if they learned of Yumas mindrape of Chiaki/"Braids". Especially if they also learned that it might have been partially responsible of all the shit that happened with Kharn and WN.

Would Sayaka be concerned that if Yuma can do it to one, she could do it to others. Actually at this point she might even care enough about Chiaki that the fact Chiaki was mindraped would upset her. Well, upset her a little bit atleast.

What would QB think about the fact that Yuma failed her duty and goes around mindraping people.

Would Wendy or Midori go berserk and try to kill Yuma.

Mami would probably belong to the group that says "Yuma did nothing wrong".

You nod. You're ready, but there's something you want to ask first. Namely, what does she think of Lucius calling you out like this, offering her help all of a sudden? You know it's a trap, but what does Sayaka think about it? ...And does she have a plan of her own going into this?

Sayaka blinks here, looking at you in silence for a moment before shrugging. "Personally? I think Lucius wants one last chance to see her mission through, Murderface. She's seen the endgame, and it's her rotting in her until we decide her execution date. She won't be looking to escape - for someone like her, someone without an actual Officio, she knows she'll be hunted wherever she goes the moment she sets foot outside our Headquarters. And it won't be just us, either, that'll be doing the hunting." It's here that your Eversor makes a face. "A lot of the other Incubators owe Kyuubey favors. Favors they'll jump at the chance to repay."

...So the other Officios will get involved?

"Likely as not. Kyuubey's gonna want to save those favors for something much more important, knowing him." Sayaka shrugs again. "But if he wants to, I don't see why not. And Lucius will have worse things than our own girls hunting her down."

Like what? You ask, unable to help yourself.

"The wolves, for one. Sixth Officio. Other crazies like her." Your Equerry taps her temple. "Batshit insane kinda people."

Huh. Well. That's something to know.

"And as far as a plan goes..." Sayaka shakes her head. "I'm following your lead this time, Murderface. Whatever you say goes, as much as that really sucks to say." She offers you a grin. "Warmaster rules and all that crap. But if I can just break my own rules and suggest something to a ratified, superior-ranking officer?"

Yeah? What's that?

Yeah? What's that?

"Carry out her execution here and now," Sayaka's grin fades, her expression growing serious. "Use your gun or have me do it, I don't care. Whatever she says, whatever intel she offers in exchange for whatever she wants you to do, give her the death she deserves, Murderface. Quick and clean. We can just wait for Mami's lead to solidify."

...That seems a bit extreme.

"You'd be doing her a favor, Murderface. Trust me on this." Sayaka reaches out to tap a finger on the touchpad - and the inner door begins its slow, grinding way up into the ceiling. Heavy gears and machinery clicking and creaking somewhere in the room at the effort. "Eversors are trained for direct assault and personnel destruction. We hate using deception and dirty tricks - we leave that to the other ranks. I'm sure Lucius hates herself for what she did back at the stadium, and she definitely despises herself for what she's doing now."

Still--

"You asked for my take on things, Murderface. That's it. You're free to take it or leave it, I don't care either way." With a brief flash of light, a sheathed blade appears at her waist - not the brutish, mass-produced brutality of Blueberry Cheesecake Brownie, but the weapon that came with her costume - an elegant sword with an ornate hand guard. "Whoever wears the hat wears the authority. And the responsibility."

...Not like that isn't true, you remark. But why does it sound bad when she says it?

"I have no fucking idea what you're talking about, Murderface." Sayaka replies, smiling as the doorway to Lucius' Silent Room is finally revealed. "No idea at all."

You shake your head, and follow her through. Into the Silent Room of the Eversor that had whored the lives of her squadmates and friends on a holy quest to kill you.

[2/3]

>>35300173

Your first impression upon entering Lucius' Silent Room - at least, its inner chamber - is that there IS indeed a very striking difference to a Silent Room meant for Eversors, and those meant for other ranks. Instead of the thinly-cushioned gurney-bed that Midori had lain in, her limbs lashed down with leather straps, Lucius is instead chained to the farthest wall, thick links of solid black steel clamping down on her wrists and ankles.

Where the floor to Midori's Silent Room was tiled with ceramic and was clean enough for you to sit down, this one in particular is cold, gray steel, with grills cut into the floor edges - probably to drain water whenever the occupant is hosed down, or made to bleed.

Midori's Silent Room was a holding facility meant for inconvenient guests. Lucius' Silent Room, in contrast, is a prison.

The only similarity here that you can see is that Lucius is also wearing the same featureless white gown that you've seen Midori wear. The same gown that Haruka had also worn, during the seeing you asked her to do.

Well, no. That's not the only similarity.

"Good, they hosed her down before we got here." Sayaka nods with satisfaction as the heavy metal door slams shut behind the both of you. "Could've at least gotten us some chairs or something, though."

...Yeah. Chairs would've been nice.

"Nothing for it, let's get this done." The Equerry nods towards the prisoner. "Go and wake Sleeping Beauty up, Warmaster. Or do you want me to do it for you?" She says, meaningfully cracking her knuckles.

You know how to do it, of course. All you need to do is to briefly touch your Soul Gem to Lucius' own, a brief transference of energy to jolt her awake.

You decide to wake Lucius up yourself. You've done this before, so it's not exactly like you're going at it blind.

Sayaka merely shakes her head at this. "Like I keep saying, Midori doesn't count. What a Callidus does after being forcibly taken out of Silent sleep is completely different from what an Eversor does in the same circumstances. Just because Midori woke up all giggly like a drunk prom date doesn't mean Lucius will."

Yeah? Well, what would an Eversor do, then, if Sayaka's this hell-bent on giving you a fucking primer on how Eversors are so fucking awesome and cool? You can't help but snipe at her here. You know your Equerry means well, but she's beginning to get on your nerves, what with them already being raw from Murderface's tantrums.

"..." Sayaka glances at the unconscious Lucius, then at you, before stepping forward and placing herself between you and the chained Eversor. "On the count of three, wake Lucius up. Watch carefully."

What? Can't she just tell you--

"Some things are better off being shown rather than being told," Sayaka says lightly as she turns to face Lucius, her caped back towards you. "Now, do as I say, Warmaster. Please."

...Fine. Whatever. Sure.

You sigh and hold your Soul Gem a few millimeters from Lucius' scarlet own. Careful to avoid the sharp spikes dotting the casing of the dark crystallization of your soul. You call out to your Equerry that you're ready.

"Alright." Sayaka nods, and you see her unsheathe her own sword. The glow of the harsh fluorescent lighting glinting on the impossibly-shiny blade. "Three. Two. One--"

The moment you carefully touch your Soul Gem to Lucius' - forcing a gasp from your lips as a chill slithers down your spine at the brief sensation of electricity - is when all hell breaks loose.

From placid, umoving unconsciousness, the chained Eversor explodes into a frothing berserker rage - one that has her springing forward in a killing lunge, fingers curled into claws, teeth bared in a snarling, roaring rictus. The movement is so sudden, so violent, that the momentum of it carrying not only a body that should be sluggish and uncooperative from soulless sleep but also the impossibly-heavy chains clamped around its wrists, its ankles, its neck.

Before she can complete her killing charge, however - and before you could draw a bead on her forehead, the Desert Eagle finding its way into your hand - what little slack that the chains restraining Lucius has quickly runs out, stopping the murder before it could even happen with a terrific crash of metal. This does not stop the enraged Magical Girl, however - and she roars a wordless cry as she strains to reach forward, the chains creaking and straining as they prevent Lucius from tearing Sayaka apart with her bare hands.

Your Equerry, despite being mere inches from the berserk Magical Girl, simply frowns - before turning to look at you.

"Training." Sayaka gestures to the snarling Lucius. "In some Officios, Eversors are trained to explode into a killing rage the moment they're forcibly woken up from Silent sleep."

...But what good does that do? You find yourself asking. Sure, an Eversor in this kind of state could kill her interrogators, but she'd still be in the headquarters of a rival Officio, and would probably be hunted down on the spot. So what's the use...?

The blue-haired Eversor smiles at you. "Well, that tells me you're not that fucked up yet, Murderface." She shakes her head. "Think about it for a moment. If you have an operative captured by a rival Officio, and they're waking her up in a Silent Room for interrogation - what is the last thing you want to happen?"

"Right." Sayaka nods, taking your silence as realization. "She kills a few girls, but the main aim is to remove her as a liability. To remove the risk of her revealing your Officio's secrets." She turns back to the rabid Lucius, the chained Magical Girl still snarling wordless curses and oaths. "Funny thing is, Lucius probably didn't know about it. This kind of thing, you need a Culexus for. Subconscious training and all that."

So...this isn't the trap Lucius has planned for you?

"I'm guessing no, but we can always ask." Sayaka flashes you a momentary smile, before hauling forward - and then smashing the guard of her sword against Lucius' jaw. The impact loud enough to echo inside the otherwise echoproofed room.

Lucius falls slack on her chains again, momentarily knocked out, but to trauma rather than to a Silent Engine's anti-magic effects. She stirs a few moments later, spitting out what looks like a tooth and a mouthful of blood. The rage gone from her eyes, replaced by what looks like anger. A dull kind, weakened by weariness and resignation.

"Is this how the famous Ninth treats its esteemed guests?" Lucius says, her voice as calm and as refined as you heard it back then, during the stadium. Over the cheer of the rabid crowd. "I'll have to speak to your manager about this, Miki Sayaka."

"You're in luck." Your Equerry sheathes her sword, the blood still fresh on its dented hand guard. "She's here, just like you asked." And it's here that Sayaka steps aside to reveal you - and you see the anger in the prisoner's eyes flash briefly into hatred.

"Matsuda." Lucius says after a long period of silence, of the both of you simply staring at each other. "Or should I say, Warmaster Matsuda. Formally ratified as of last night, I believe?" She smiles, her teeth pinked with blood. "Congratulations. I'd curtsey, but I'm a bit tied up at the moment."

The latter, though it's barely a spoiler anymore.

By the way, most writeup series (all of them?) take place more or less in the past, and you can reasonably expect the Oficio/group status to be slightly different in the present time(though the changes would logically stem from what's written in the writeups).

You decide to try Yuma's suggestion. Holstering your Desert Eagle - ignoring how Lucius' eyes flashed at the sight of the golden handcannon - it's here that you pose the question that your own Culexus Rank Leader gave you to use.

"What do you want?"

And just like how Yuma predicted - this visibly catches the Eversor off guard, her eyes widening underneath her matted mop of stringy blonde hair. The self-assured smirk on her lips momentarily slackening into an 'o' of surprise, before quickly resuming its former shape.

"...I admit, I wasn't expecting that," Lucius shakes her head, her chains clinking together at the movement. "I was expecting something much less...considerate. Much less civil." She nods down at her own knees, bent underneath her as she slumps forward - letting the tension of her chains keep her upright. "I wasn't expecting to wake up to see my own kneecaps still unshot, at that."

"Keep blabbing like that, then you can look forward to being chained to a wheelchair." Sayaka spits. "Now answer the fucking question."

"There it is. The famous Ninth Officio temper." Lucius' smirk turns into a smile, as warm and as friendly as the crescent of a well-oiled blade. "And I was hoping that the culling of both the Betrayer and the Slayer from your ranks would have at least improved it some. Apparently, this isn't the case."

The Slayer? You blink at the title, turning to Sayaka. Your Equerry shakes her head in dismissal. "Kirika's title, or at least that's what the other Officios called her. She didn't like it, she thought it was...inelegant."

"An inelegant title for an inelegant murderer," The blonde Eversor replies. "But yes, I understand your impatience. Let me just gather my thoughts, please. Silent sleep isn't something I've been able to bounce back from right away."

"A duel, Warmaster Matsuda. I challenge you to a duel."

Now it's Sayaka who explodes, barging in from her corner of the room to snarl directly at Lucius' face. "STOP. FUCKING. AROUND, LUCIUS. You are challenging a fucking Warmaster to an honor duel. MY Warmaster." To her credit, the blonde Eversor doesn't flinch at all - simply meeting Sayaka glare for glare, as if the heavy metal links chaining her to the wall and floor of a Silent Room simply didn't exist. "Choose your words carefully before I fuck your head off."

"May I finish, please? I offer no insult. I know where I am." Lucius turns to you, and it's a moment before you gesture for Sayaka to allow her to continue. Your Equerry acquiesces, but only begrudgingly, growling underneath her breath.

"My thanks, Warmaster Matsuda." Lucius smiles gratefully. "As I was saying - I challenge you to a duel. With blades, not with those brutish things that you thwarted my efforts with. Whatever arena, I cannot care less - I just ask that it take place in the full view of your own Officio. You win, I lead you to the Prophet personally, with my life in your hands, to do with whatever you wish."

"And if you win?" Sayaka asks for you, her arms crossed under her breasts, a sure sign that she's trying to reign in the impulse to be murderously violent. "What happens then?"

"Then I die, but with my mission completed." Lucius nods to your Equerry. "You of all people should understand where I'm coming from, Miki Sayaka. We finish the job we're given or we don't come back at all. I'm simply allowing your Warmaster a chance to get what she needs instead of simply having me executed."

Another smile, and you can't help but feel that this one seems more sincere than the rest she'd been flashing. "If it makes you feel any better, this is far from my being altruistic for some reason or other. I also wish to carve some honor out of this - to fight one last swordfight before finally leaving this mortal coil. Execution is the worst fate for an Eversor, after all. Dying without a weapon in her hands..." She clicks her tongue in slow disapproval. "A shameful end. A lamentable death."

Sayaka scoffs here. "Then you'd better start with the prayers, because there's no way in hell she's going to fall for that." Your Equerry turns to you. "Right, Murderface? ...Murderface?"

How do you react?

[]Accept. If it's a duel she wants, she's got it.
[]Refuse. She's planning something, and you're not going to fall for it. Threaten her with execution instead.

I'll add that I feel this option is better than outright refusing because we keep her talking and make her desperate. Simply accepting is the most foolish thing we could do. However, simply refusing is also bad because we don't get to hear anymore from her.

I'd rather see if she lets something slip while we keep her talking and keep our cards to ourselves a little longer.

You narrow your eyes at the smiling Eversor, finding yourself wanting to cross your own arms over your chest, in unconscious imitation of Sayaka's frustrated body language. You immediately light a cigarette instead, your first breath upon ignition burning the stick halfway down to its filter. You blow the smoke away from Lucius, but immediately wish that you'd blown it into her face the moment you see her nose crinkle.

"Smoking. A filthy habit." Lucius shakes her head. "Well, Warmaster Matsuda? What do you say?"

You glare at her for a moment longer, before shaking your head. You have other leads, you tell her. What makes her so sure that you'd accept her challenge?

Her answer is a laugh - a pretty laugh, one that you should be hearing from a dignified woman of class in a beautiful dress, instead of a defeated young woman shackled in chains, with only a dingy white medical gown protecting her modesty. "I must respectfully disagree, Warmaster Matsuda - you have no leads. Not a single one."

She shakes her head. "If I'm guessing correctly, you mean my colleagues, yes? My squadmates, the ones you've stopped from carrying out their appointed tasks? Kana, even?" Another laugh, this one much shorter, much harsher than the first. "They know nothing, Warmaster. Interrogate them, torture them, seduce them to your side, rip out the truth from their minds - whatever you find will not lead you to the Prophet."

And she does? You step forward, wanting more than ever to put your cigarette out on one of her eyes, just to stop her from smirking.

"I brought the staff to Oriko." Lucius's smile is terrible now. "For a time, I was Ahriman's will made manifest, until we found her true successor. I alone know how to find the Prophet, I alone know the path back to her fastness."

Another moment, and the Eversor's smile turns kindly. "Let's not spend time posturing or trying to outwit one another, Warmaster Matsuda. I have little in the way of wiles. I am no trickster or manipulator - I am a warrior, first and foremost. I deal with reality with a blade in my hand. I am the only lead you have that will lead you to Oriko. Kill me now, and the killings and the burnings will continue. Give me what I want, and you have a chance to end the madness before the Prophet decides to burn this city along with you."

You glare down at Lucius, before shaking your head. What she's saying...you don't want to even acknowledge it, but she makes sense. In a twisted way, she does.

"You're not actually considering it, are you?" Sayaka asks you incredulously, her eyes wide. "Murderface, this is a trap. She wants to kill you. I--"

"I don't think I've ever said anything to the contrary, Miki Sayaka." Lucius calls out to your Equerry. "Yes, I want your Warmaster dead. I want to see her corpse cooling by my feet, with her Soul Gem ground to powder underneath my boot's heel--"

"..." Sayaka wordlessly but violently gesticulates with both hands towards the chained Eversor's direction, as if trying to make her point even further.

"--but the difference is, I wish to do it with my own two hands. With my own sword. In mortal combat, in an audience of my peers." Lucius nods towards you. "Without guile, without the cloak concealing my blade. Without deception. I wish to fight you, Warmaster, and kill you before dying myself. I want the last chapter of my life to be spent fighting a fight that actually matters."

...You shake your head again. Something doesn't fit, here. Supposing if you accept - what's stopping her from escaping?

"Where would I run to?" Lucius looks surprised, shocked even. "Back to Oriko? With her knowing that I've failed catastrophically in my own duties? Or that I've spent much too long already as a prisoner in the Officio she so despises?" She shakes her head. "I would be hunted every day, every hour, every waking moment of my life, Warmaster Matsuda. And that is no way to live."

She laughs again. "And how would I escape, with your entire Officio watching us? Even if I win by slaying you, my death is assured, if not by Miki Sayaka here then the many others under your command. I am sure they would be just as eager to punish my cowardice as much as they would your murder by my hand, Warmaster Matsuda."

"I realize it's a difficult decision to make." Lucius suddenly says, breaking the awkward silence between you. No smile graces her lips this time - instead, she looks almost apologetic. "But those are my terms, Warmaster, and I have to stand by them. If you truly cannot find it in yourself to accept, then have me executed instead. That should be a much easier and much cleaner way of solving things, yes?" She rattles her chains here. "I wish you luck with the Prophet then. Perhaps, when she's killed enough and burned enough, she may let you find her."

How do you respond?

Yuma cannot refuse a direct order from her Warmaster.

And if Lucius is strong enough to not be mindread, we'll mindrape her minions in front of her. Starting with Kana.

All she wants is to get out of the cell. The duel is solely an excuse. Once she'sd out of the cell, Oriko and Ahriman will blow her soul gem from a distance - or cause her to witch out, which has been done in the past to us. We have no reason to believe it's impossible at this point.

Actually, could we just forcibly make her hold Muramasa?

Without the protective procedure she would be easily corrupted by the sword. Kirika would take over her mind eventually would she not, and learn where Oriko is? Heck, she is probably partially corrupt already thanks to Ahriman making it even easier.

No need to fuckup Yuma and we get the info we need.

Only if we were so utterly stupid that we would let Lucius run free with Kirika.

What I am suggesting is that we lock her up even tigher, so tight that even powered by GW, she cannot escape.

Then leave the GW touching her for a couple of days. Then remove GW, contact Kirika, point out that we told her the truth about Ahriman and ask where Oriko/Ahriman is.

This is actually on my end. When I first wrote Haruka, I wrote it that she cannot view Chiaki perfectly, there are gaps where she loses track of Chiaki. Decu's running with the same for Oriko, or anyone who tries to predict what Chiaki will do (who knows what the heck the readers will decide, right?)

Prognosticators basically see Chiaki as a blur. They have some idea of what she might do, but she doesn't always follow the script.

Now, and this part is speculation on my end, that squad that was sent to kill Misaka were probably working on the assumption that they had enough time based on a prediction from Oriko. It could have been right, or it could have been wrong (depending on anon's choices). In this case, it was wrong.

Hahaha, sorry! I also want to add, they didn't quite expect Chiaki to be working with Wendy as well. That was what I meant by the unexpected use of time stop - in that it was used in conjunction with a very fast vehicle, i.e. the Schpeltiger. Oriko would have taken into consideration Chiaki's time stop, definitely, but not with that kind of assistance! It allowed them to use the Time Stop that much effectively!

MAGICAL GIRL NOIR QUEST
THE FALL OF CHIAKI MATSUDA

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 10/10/14(Fri)09:33:34 No.35425406 Archived

You glare down at Lucius for a moment, before shaking your head.

No. You say the refusal simply, coldly, letting it escape your lips in an icy snarl that would've done Dildoes proud.

"...No?" To her credit, the Eversor doesn't smile or sneer at this, sparing you from a snide rebuttal - that small kindness also sparing her from feeling the butt of your Desert Eagle being smashed across her face in a brutal pistol-whip. "Didn't you hear me correctly, Warmaster Matsuda? I am offering you the Prophet, if only you'd meet me in honorable combat--"

No, you say again. You're not fighting her in an honor duel or a murder duel or whatever the hell she wants. You've already fought her once, you've already fought the duel that mattered - and you won. Even with her squad backing her up, EVEN with you having to worry about an entire stadium audience AND your client.

You're done with dueling, you growl at her. This isn't a fucking shonen anime. But more than that, you're done with Lucius and her demands. You're done meeting the people you're supposed to be killing on THEIR terms - it's time they met you at yours.

>>35425406

It's here that Lucius' composed facade cracks a bit. Just a catch in her voice, nothing more. "...It seems your Warmaster is speaking madness. Sayaka, as Equerry, you should--"

"CHRIST, SHUT UP," Your Equerry all but roars right into Lucius' face, teeth bared in an almost bestial ferocity. "Wag that fucking tongue without being asked to again, and I'll rip it out myself! With my bare HANDS!"

Lucius sighs the sigh of the massively-bereaved. "I'm in the clutches of madwomen, apparently. ...Fine, fine." She adds when Sayaka moves towards her, glove-clad fingers curled into claws.

The blue-haired Eversor snorts here, before turning to you. "Well, Murderface? You're not gonna take her up on her challenge, so how do you want to do this?"

Before you could answer, it's hear that you see a ghost materialize in front of you. No, not a ghost - a manifestation. One that looks ragged and bloodied, like a corpse clawing its way out of its grave, thirsting for revenge. Its long black hair that formerly fell down her back in soft, luxurious waves now matted and ragged, its pristine costume scuffed and dirtied. Like it's been through a war. Maybe two.

And when it speaks, it speaks with your voice. Just colder. Smoother. More self-assured, despite the pain tainting words.

"Well. Apparently you're capable of listening to common sense and not let yourself get carried away by antiquated concepts like honor." Dildoes huffs. "You're slowly starting to impress me, Nameless One. Keep it up."

...What? Well, you're glad she approves, but...what's she doing out of your Desert Eagle? You didn't even know she could do that--

"You could stand to up your calorie intake, you know." She steps past you to glare down at the chained Eversor kneeling in front of you. "I'll only be able to manifest for a few minutes, no more. I suggest a hearty meal after this, unless you're that keen on wasting away." Dildoes turns towards you, before flipping her hair over her shoulder.

>>35425414

O...kay? You frown at her, shaking your head. That still doesn't explain--

"I manifested because I just spent an hour trying to calm down your doomed future." Dildoes gestures to her ragged form. "She's now sleeping it off in her mirror, rendered somnolent thanks to the hesitant one's last-minute assistance." A smirk curls her lips. "I don't envy the headache she'll have once she wakes up, however."

She turns back to Lucius, frowning. "But never mind that. I'm here because I needed to tell you something, Nameless One. Something that you need to listen to."

You're listening, you say finally.

"Good." Dildoes nods. "Your cursed form was visibly incensed because of something she recently remembered about the green-haired one standing vigil outside. From what I can make out, it seems that it involves tearing the truth from someone's mind through psychic sense." She points towards Lucius. "Whether the green-haired one is truly the sinner that has your doom baying for her blood doesn't matter - what matters is that she can do it at all. Use her to get whatever truth you need to kill this Prophet."

...That's...well, that's not a bad idea, but--

"You fight like a brawler and kill like a murderer," She turns towards you again, her eyes of faded lilac sharp as flint. "A beastly way of going about things, but direct. Honest. Pragmatic. These are qualities that have gotten us up to this point, unbroken and unslain. Don't let petty concepts like honor cloud your judgment." She lets out a sigh. "Honor has killed millions of people - and never in my life have I seen it save a single one."

And just like that, she vanishes, like mist breaking apart in the wind. Leaving you once more alone with your prisoner and your Equerry.

"Murderface?" Sayaka repeats, her voice oddly distant, yet growing clearer with every word. "You okay? I asked--"

You hold up a hand. You know what she asked. She doesn't need to repeat it.

Lucius finally allows a smirk to come through. "Madwomen with visions. Now that's worse."

How do you get the truth out of Lucius?

This will MASSIVELY piss of the Murderface-incarnation. And possibly traumatise Yuma to boot. Though if we forgive her for her role in mindraping Girl A, that will probably help (but at the cost of pissing Murderface even more).

Still, dunno what else we can really do? I doubt Lucius would break from basic torture. So unless someone has another idea?

Not basic torture. Chiaki was previously described as a gifted torturer that had impressed Kharn. She gave us her old torture knives as a gift too. I'm sure Chiaki can pull it off.

Another issue is that this might also be the point where we could get the bonus from Dildoes (the way we did from Braids) for listening to her.

Then again, if we actually succeeded in torturing the info out, she would probably be equally impressed. She seems to care lots more about results afterall.

Submersing it in boiling water for example, acid or potassium carbonate or anything alkaline for that matter.

Well... This is just a theory, but... Dildos represents the Homura's, right? As in a hivemind of operator Homura's (maybe a specific one?) while Murderface represents corrupted Chiakis, and Braids represents the Moemuras (but not canon Moemura because she was a version that fell in love with Sayaka)

A reference was made to a version of Homura/Chiaki that killed herself, so maybe the last mirror is for those? The ones that killed themselves?

Alternatively, the last mirror could be for RibbonHomus (too close to Dildos, imo) or for Homucifer

You turn to Sayaka, before jerk your head towards the room's exit. "Get Yuma in here." You say this in the voice that Vintage had taught you to speak, just before she left. The Warmaster's voice. A voice of command, one brooking no argument.

Your Equerry blinks at this, her brow furrowing in puzzlement. "Yuma? But the Silent Room's holding and focused on her, we don't need a Culexus in here--"

The rest of her sentence dies in her throat as you stare directly at her in cold silence. Your face carefully impassive, expressionless, blank. Letting your own stare do the talking for you.

"...Understood, Warmaster." Sayaka rises to her feet from where she'd crouched beside Lucius and salutes you, before letting herself out of the Silent Room. The heavy automated locks on the doors clicking with an almost animalistic frenzy as they hurry to unlock, hastened by your Equerry's own impatience.

"Choosing brutish, uncivilized torture over an honorable and elegant duel, Warmaster Matsuda?" Your prisoner says the moment the first door closes behind the blue-haired Eversor. The blonde neering up at you, her eyes flashing with contempt.

"It was a mistake of me to think that you had even a single iota of honor." She shakes her head, her mane of tangled, matted blonde strands cascading in filthy waves at the movement. "Fine. Use any weapon or employ any torturer - it matters little. You will not get what you want, even if you pull me apart down to my bones. I will never break--"

"Who said anything about torture?" You cut Lucius off, silencing her with the same stare you used on Sayaka mere moments ago.

"No one said anything about torture. I'm just bringing in someone who'll ask you my questions for me."

Lucius frowns, confusion etched on her face, and as she opens her mouth to speak does the door to the Silent Room open again, allowing your Equerry in. Yuma, your Culexus Rank Leader, follows behind her - the green-cat lunchbox still clasped tightly to her chest by her gloved hands.

"Here she is," Sayaka announces, throwing her cape over one shoulder in a visible attempt to stop herself from recoiling upon entering the Silent Room again. She turns towards Yuma with her usual disdainful scowl. "Murderface wanted you here, like I said. Stop calling me a liar."

"...Yes, but..." Yuma turns her helmeted head towards you. "Warmaster, I don't...I've never really performed an actual excoriation before--"

It's here that Lucius laughs. "A Culexus, Matsuda? You want to corrupt one of your Soulbound to do your own dirty work for you? How pitiful! Pick up the knife yourself!"

The prisoner starts laughing, cackling even. Sayaka growls out an expletive and moves to break Lucius' jaw - but you stop her just in time by grabbing onto her cape and pulling her back. Very nearly strangling her.

"FUCK! GOD DAMMIT, MURDERFACE, THAT HURT!"

You let go of the sputtering, hacking Eversor before turning back to Yuma. You've...traded blows with her before, and you've trusted her with your life before as well. But never had she looked her age more than now - even with the Anima Speculum hiding her face.

You shake your head, and explain to Yuma that you didn't bring her in here to torture Lucius.

No, you brought her here so she could - at your order - rip out some information from the Eversor's skull.

Yuma is silent and utterly motionless at that. When she finally speaks a few moments later, her voice is...well, there's no other word for it: fearful. Like someone afflicted with a crippling, debilitating fear being forced to relive their worst nightmares.

This is decisively getting Yuma over her doubts of herself. You don't want your Culexes rank leader not operating at her full potential now do you?

[x]Learn. This is an order, Yuma. Prove to me you're not my Culexus Rank Leader simply because you're the last one standing.

I'm so tempted to go with the second one, because this one has the chance for Yuma to flub this just to keep up the charade that she doesn't know.

But, I don't want her to Witch Out right here.

I would assume Chiaki has a decent idea. Murderface suddenly goes berserk on Yuma and says she now remembers, and then Dildoes appears later and says Yuma can do this.

Since Murderface basically is Chiakis alternate incarnation, its pretty clear. Perhaps Chiaki has not realised it yet in all the excitement, but she is not stupid enough not to put the pieces together. Though ofcourse she knows none of the details.

"Yeah, I'm getting to that." Sayaka says after a while. "Anyway, there's only room for three people in a Silent Room, and that's counting the prisoner inside. If we're going to start this interrogation, you have to pick who you're bringing in along with you."

That's true, two threads ago we had to choose between bringing Yuma or Sayaka because the room wouldn't fit them both in.
And now they are both waltzing around in here.

You shake your head. "You do," you tell the Culexus standing in front of you, your own reflection glaring at you from her Anima Speculum's glossy visor. "You've done it once before, haven't you?"

The packed lunch drops from Yuma's gloved hands and falls to the metal-grilled floor with a sharp crack of a noise. The lid popping off and spilling the meticulously-prepared food across the grimy, rusting plates in a depressing heap of wasted sustenance.

Among the white grains of carefully-steamed rice, you could make out Kyoko's own clumsy, yet meticulous work: vienna sausages cut into dismembered, one-eyed octopuses. A boiled egg, once pressed into the shape of a grinning cartoony cat with seaweed eyes, now bleeding powdery yolk from its half-pulped face.

"N-no...I..." Yuma takes a step back - the cramped Silent Room immediately arresting her movement, her back thumping against the wall. "I...I just...I had to--"

"FOR FUCK'S SAKE, YUMA!" Sayaka roars, rushing forward in an attempt to rescue the lunch - before cursing again as she realizes that the food's all but wasted. She stands up, the now-empty lunchbox in her hands "Kyoko woke up early today just to make you this, you fucking IDIOT! Why didn't you stick it in your fucking inventory?!"

Yuma's reply is something akin to a harsh grinding noise, like a tank changing gears. ...No, she's crying. Your Culexus is crying inside her helmet, a child's guilty, burbling sobbing with half-mumbled apologies and explanations. The vox speakers twisting all of it into near-indecipherable mechanical growls.

"What? Are you crying?" Sayaka blinks, concern briefly flashing across her features before the usual mask of barely-kept rage slides back on. "Jesus Christ, your Warmaster is waiting. You already spilled your fucking lunch all over the fucking floor, you could at least spare us the embarrassment and do what she wants--"

>> ☐ Deculture 10/10/14(Fri)11:50:38 No.35427101

You hold up your hand again, silencing Sayaka. Your Equerry makes to spit something at you, something probably harsh and something she'd probably regret later - but one look from you is enough to convince her to check herself.

"...Right. I'll be outside the inner door. This room's only built for three anyway, and it's getting fucking cramped already." The blue-haired Eversor stalks off, the character lunchbox gripped tightly with both hands. "You just shout if you need anything." She growls as she pushes past you, and you acknowledge it with a nod.

Once you're left alone with your Culexus Rank Leader - and the prisoner, of course, Lucius watching the both of you in curious, yet wary silence - it's here that Yuma tries to speak again, through her sobbing. "W-Warmaster, I just...what I did back then--"

You shake your head. You don't care about what she did. Not now, at least.

All you need is for her to do it again. To Lucius. To get the information you need out of the Eversor's mind in any way possible.

Finding Oriko - finding the Prophet - is your top priority right now. To prevent any more people - Magical Girls or otherwise - from dying to her brazen terrorist attacks.

It takes Yuma a few more moments of muffled, gurgling crying before she starts to move. Stepping forward, in front of Lucius, a gloved hand stretched out towards the Eversor's face but not touching it. Lucius bares her teeth at this, turning away from the offered hand.

"Get away from me, Soulbound," The ragged, chained blonde snarls. "Get out of my head--"

+ The information you need is...warded, Warmaster. + Yuma's voice suddenly whispers in your mind, free of the vox-corruption that usually twisted her words into something blood-curdling. +...Warded by something I've never seen or encountered before. I...I may be able to force it out of her, but I don't know what it'll do to her psyche. + A pause of hesitation. + The attempt alone could irrevocably damage her. +

Can it kill her? You pulse back, as best you could. Riding the connection she made with you.

Yuma shakes her head. + No, but...it might cause her to Witch Out. I would...recommend destroying her Soul Gem before then. +

"I can hear you," Lucius seethes. "I can't...make out the words, but I know what you're planning." She glares up at you through her stringy mop of sweat-matted hair. "Matsuda, I name you coward and murderer. You'll resort to something like this just to get what you want? Instead of settling it in an honorable clash of blades and souls?"

She spits at you, a glob of saliva splattering against your cheek. "You're no better than the freak you replaced. But at least SHE knew honor."

Your Culexus glances down at your prisoner. + Warmaster, if...if I do this, there's no going back. ...For me or her. +

You're not sure if it's just the peculiarities of words being pulsed between minds, but you detect a note of...resignation in the Culexus' voice.

How do you react?

For the original mindrape the blame is on Yuma ofcourse.

But if we order her to do it here and now as her superiour, then WE take the blame for anything that happens.

And we also lose any moral ground for condemning her mindrape on ethical grounds, if we are willing to use it ourself when it benefits us, so forgiveness makes sense (or we become a hypocrite).

Last chance, you growl at Lucius. You're giving her one last chance to cooperate before you have Yuma rip her secrets out from her skull. And from what your Culexus has told you, it's going to be a very painful and traumatic process. Something that the Eversor won't be able to walk away from.

"Of course it's going to be," Lucius laughs harshly, the ragged edge of desperation in her voice. "I told you. The truth in my mind is warded by the Prophet. I can only give it willingly. It cannot be forced from me." She bares her teeth in a savage grin, all elegance and grace gone. "But fine. Fine. I'll cooperate, Matsuda. I'll cooperate all you like."

Then--

"After my one last swordfight."

You glare down at Lucius with narrowed eyes, and she meets your gaze with a maddening one of her own.

There's really no fucking helping people sometimes, is there?

"Warmaster?" Yuma gets your attention in a vox-corrupted snarl. But instead of her words being obscured by her choking sobs, then turned nearly unintelligible by her helm speakers, her voice is...clear. Her tone somehow sounding more like straight-backed acceptance, rather than weak-kneed resignation.

"Don't...worry about me. I'll do my best." She nods. "I only wish to serve - and I don't want these psychopaths from killing more people than they already have, too." The Culexus turns to look at Lucius, her skulled helm leering down at the Eversor.

How do you respond?

[]Order Yuma to extract the information from Lucius' mind by any means necessary.

Most likely. We first basically told her "yeah, I remember when you mindraped me!". Then we order her to do it again, to Lucius.

Then we actually state how horrible it was to intimidate Lucius, but since we experienced it, Yuma would have every reason to believe we are talking from experience, and feel even more horrified/disgusted.

Yuma is going to go nuts. We will lose our last culexus and Kyoko will possibly hate us forever.

All in all, this will end badly, which is why there were so many "do you REALLY wan't to do this" votes.

Ohwell. tg did nothing wrong.

The "Are you sure you want to do that?" posts from Decu aren't to warn us, they're just there because people voted for the optional dialogue instead of going forward with the plot. As yuma mentioned, lucius is likely to witch out with this procedure done to her. Since yuma survived brain draining girl a, the procedure shouldnt normally be fatal to yuma except unless she will be attempting to suppress lucius' witching out in order to draw out more info.

On this assumption, i think that if presented with a choice for more intel against risking yuma, i'd suggest erring on the side of caution and reducing the risk against yuma.

Noir is a broad genre, and if you ask 10 film professors to define Noir, you'll get 10 different answers.

Your example, and his >>35428608 example, and the example of a guy being cornered into doing worse and worse things to cover up what he did in the first place, are all valid examples of Noir.

They don't have to be undeserving, it's just that there's an undercurrent of futility about it. That no matter how much good you make in the world it's probably still going to be outnumbered by the bad, because the bad is just so monolithic that one person can only do so much.

But it's also about doing that much anyway, because it's better than doing nothing.

You nod at Yuma. You don't need to pulse it or voice it - she knows what you want her to do.

She returns the nod, before crouching down to Lucius' level. Stretching out her gloved hand again, and this time touching her palm to the struggling Eversor's forehead. The moment that Yuma's palm makes contact is when Lucius screams - loud, long, and cursing not only the Culexus but you.

"I'LL KILL YOU! COWARD! MURDERER! TRAITOR! HERETIC!" The chains lashing her to the floor and wall begin to creak and crash and strain as the Eversor seems to pull on whatever reserves of strength she has left to try and escape. "YOU CAN'T DO THIS TO ME! I AM LUCIUS THE ETERNAL, I DESERVE MY LAST SWORDFIGHT, I'M--"

"...Sorry." Yuma murmurs a single, regretful apology, one that makes Lucius freeze in place in sudden, frightful confusion - before she screams again.

No words this time - just pain. Indescribable, immeasurable pain.

Pain. And suffering.

+ I did this to you + Yuma's voice suddenly echoes in your mind as you watch her earn her paycheck, Lucius's Soul Gem in one hand and your Desert Eagle in the other. Ready to kill the Eversor the moment you saw her about to turn.

+ I did this to you because I needed to know. I did this to you because I had to know before I died +

The scent of burning flesh catches your attention, and you whirl around to find its source. A split-second is all it takes before you realize that the pork-like stench - and the resultant smoke - is coming from Yuma herself. Wispy black trails curling away from the gaps and seams of her Culexus hardsuit, under her helmet, from that tiny repaired crack in her visor that you yourself made during a certain disagreement.

Wait. Wait, what's happening? Why is she--

You move forward, reaching for the Culexus, to break the contact - but an invisible wall of force slams you back. Giving you a brief taste of the searing heat radiating from the pair.

Still kneeling, still screaming, you also see crimson flame gout from Lucius' blank eyes, from her agape mouth, cooking her from the inside. At the very same time that Yuma's arm - the one whose hand is pressed tightly against Lucius' face - bursts aflame. The reek of burning leather joining the miasma of choking odors in the closed, confined room.

+ It's the ward the failsafe please stay away I'm almost through +

"Murderface? MURDERFACE!" Sayaka's voice comes from behind the inner door of the Silent Room. "What the fuck's going in there?! Readings are saying that it's hotter than a fucking volcano where Lucius is! I--"

You roar at her to get medical staff right here, on the double. Sayaka curses before running off, her footsteps quick and urgent.

+ I did this to you because I wanted to make sure Miss Malal was doing the right thing +

+ That's what I keep telling myself +

+ I didn't mean to hurt anyone +

+ All I ever wanted was the truth +

Another moment, and this time Yuma joins the prisoner in the screaming - but instead of merely pain, hers is trebled with effort. With will. With resolve.

And with her screams comes a torrent of emotion, pulsed directly into your mind. Regret. Sorrow. Anger. Hate. But most of all - guilt. Guilt in spades, in a drowning flood. Making you choke back sobs of your own as your dying Culexus' words fill your mind in a desperate, hurried torrent.

The climax arrives just as their twinned screams reach their crescendo - with Lucius completely and utterly bursting into shrieking, searing crimson flame.

Dropping your Desert Eagle - letting the Golden Weapon drop to the floor with a heavy thunk - you lunge forward and grab the burning Culexus from Lucius' killing embrace, gritting your teeth against the pain of grabbing melting leather with your bare hands.

+TAKE IT OFF PLEASE MY HELMET I CAN'T BREATHE+

You growl something about noisy Culexus as you drag Yuma away from the still-burning, still-chained Eversor - and the moment you're clear is the moment you pull at the pressure seals underneath her helmet. They come away with reluctant hisses, and you fumble with your own burned, blistered fingers to remove the Anima Speculum. Bracing yourself for the wave of nausea that would undoubtedly come.

You drag the helmet clear, and see just what had happened to your Culexus. What she had done to herself in your service.

The...fire, whatever it was, had burned away the lower half of her face. Her teeth bared at you in a blackened, lipless grin, the flesh almost charred to nothing except for those closest to the bone itself. A grisly imitation of the humorless skull painted on all Anima Speculum helmets.

Jesus Christ. That's...that's what the ward was? A mental ward against interrogation did THIS?

You dimly hear Sayaka screaming your name - and Yuma's - as the door to the Silent Room throws back open again, this time with the medical staff you asked for. One of them, anyway - someone with long dark hair, a white lab coat, and a professional if worried smile. One that seemed to freeze at the sight of you, rather than the half-cooked Culexus or the still-cooking Eversor. She called herself the current Apothecary Primus, Touno Asai.

You nod at her, dimly, before looking back down at Yuma. Despite her gruesome injuries, the upper half of the Culexus' face is intact - including her eyes. She looks at you with startlingly clear crimson ones, and despite the pain in them, they convey all you need to know, which is then confirmed by a pulsed thought, weak but triumphant. Wounded but victorious.

+ I KNOW WHERE ORIKO IS +

You nod again, before smashing Lucius' darkening Soul Gem into the floor with your burnt fist.

Magical Scribe Eleanor Slam versus The New Grind

Today I learned something crucial. It's that, if you've overslept from exhaustion due to overexertion, the solution is to come in late and accept your boss grilling you on whether or not you're really you, as opposed to somebody posing as you. I can understand Jael's paranoia about… Everything, as I'm still convinced the other shoe is going to drop one of these days, but come on. It's a fucking general store. The worst thing you have to worry about is shoplifters.

Well, I didn't do that. I did what I was not supposed to do : I tried to parkour my way to job. Don't do that, unless you're sure your legs can stop shaking long enough to clear the distance between the rooftops. Because otherwise you're going to get yourself hurt. I blame Fuckface for that stupid idea. That was the kind of thing she'd do, and her retarded influence must have rubbed off on me.

…God, my limbs feel like pain-filled jelly. "Light workout" my ass. How can they call it that with a straight face? One hundred push-ups, one hundred sit-ups, one-hundred squats, and ten kilometers of running is not a light workout unless you're a freak. And they want me to do at least that much every single fucking day?

Fuck. I'm still hurting in places I didn't know I had.

Well, it's a few minutes before I need to clock in. At least I've gotten here early enough to patch myself up and catch my breath. Other than the tortuous workout routine, Kai gave me a first aid kit and a portable barbecue pit, saying that everyone in the Sixth gets those. No fucking idea how to use the latter. So right now I'm just washing the blood off my elbows and applying the disinfectant – ow ow ow, that stings like a motherfucker – so I can put on the bandages. Maybe pop some analgesics.

…They have little cartoon cat faces on the bandages. Is this somebody's idea of a joke?

… Hehe. They're smiling kitties. Cute.

Huh. That actually went a lot better than I thought it would. Yuma actually lived.

Those injuries suck, but if entire limbs can be regrown, then those can too. Yuma sees stable despite what happened, and not about to witch out.

I also figure this should be viewed as sufficient punishment by even most Yuma haters.

We can have Chiaki forgive Yuma next turn, which should let her go of her guilt and then go hunt Oriko.

Oh, don't forget the painkillers. You're supposed to smile for customers, Eleanor, not wince at them. Hope I get the dosage right - it's usually two pills, isn't it?

With my injuries wrapped up, I can slip on the black and orange apron that passes for a uniform. Or struggle a bit with it - damn this bulky- there it goes. There's a tag on the front with my name on it, or at least I hope it's my name and I didn't grab someone else's by mistake. That was really embarrassing...

At least signing in doesn't mean actually signing in. It means swiping a card into a slot and hoping that whatever's flashing on the nearby screen indicates success. And I haven't forgotten mine yet - rather proud of that, to be honest.

The little beeping sound it's making probably indicates success, so yay!

And the painkillers have reduced my aches to a dull throb, which means I probably only have to worry about headaches now. Also yay!

...Though there doesn't seem to be anybody else here yet. I'm not early, I don't think - analog watch says I'm on time - so what happened? A flu breakout or something like that?

...Now I'm getting myself worried about people whose names I don't even know. Hope they're all okay, anyway. If nothing else, I don't want to deal with customers all by myself. I don't think I can safely operate a cash register.

But it's better than paperwork, so I'm okay with it. And I get to actually help people! People that aren't batshit insane!

Well, they usually aren't. They can be rowdy sometimes, but they kind of shut up and apologize after a while when I ask them to stop, which is better than things normally are when I ask people to stop doing things.

...Point is things are better. Yeah, definitely better. They could be better than better, but they're not horrible. It's the difference between getting your cheek pinched and being set on fire. A minor annoyance versus something that makes you wish you were dead already. So that's good, right?

Push the cart this way, push the cart that way. Stack this, stack that. Stack things on shelves, stack things in displays, stack things on top of each other, being helpful hmm hmm hmm~. It'd be nice if I could read the labels, but I think I've gotten pretty good at this in spite of everything.

Oh, and the other people working here made it here okay. That's quite a relief, because I don't think I can run this place on my own! I can't even ring things up without triggering a trance - god that was embarrassing, and scary. Thought I was going to be kicked out for that!

I should learn their names at some point; I only know Jael's so far.

And now my favorite part : putting stuff up in the candy aisle. Colorful packages dot the shelves as I push the cart full of merchandise down the aisle. There's a lingering smell of chocolate and sugar, despite everything being packaged in boxes or wrapping. Maybe somebody vandalized the displays? I know I did that a few times when I was little, until I got caught. I may need to check for that. Hopefully I can get it done fast enough that I'm not accused of lingering. That, too, makes Jael suspicious.

I still don't recognize half the things here, but maybe it's just different packaging rather than different names. Or it's just been a really long time since I've seen American confections. Starting to get a bit nostalgic and homesick here...

Hey, stop that, Eleanor. You're not thinking about that right now, no way. This is a happy place. Stay positive and stop frowning, or customers are going to complain. Just put the stuff where it goes and match colors with like colors.

Speaking of customers, I'm hearing the squeaking of sneakers coming closer, but slightly off-rhythm. Sounds like someone's unsure on their feet. I turn towards the source and beam, giving my best enthusiastic greeting while still continuing to put things where I think they belong. "Hello, Marina!" I exclaim, "can I help you with anything today?"

She's a frequent shopper from what I've seen. Really nice lady, even if she is a little off. I don't think she's slow, so much as... Dreamy?

I keep my eyes trained on her while waiting for her to respond. I've found it takes her a few seconds to notice you. There's a little clinking sound from her fiddling with her necklace, which she does when she's spacing out.

Finally she turns toward me, side ponytail swaying a bit, and smiles. "...Good morning, Eleanor," Marina replies. As per usual, she sounds relaxed. Maybe a little sleepy. "I was just picking up some more chocolates. Are any of them on sale?"

"Yes, actually!" I say excitedly, beaming as I lead her toward a brightly colored display. Hee, she must've missed it earlier. "We got these new ones in that are going at two for a dollar!"

Marina picks up one of the boxes I indicated and scrutinizes it slowly and lazily. "...How do they taste?" she inquires.

"I haven't had the chance to try them yet," I answer honestly. "I was considering picking up a couple boxes for myself if people came back to buy more." Which is probably not something you want to say to a customer, but I'm not good at lying about this stuff.

She considers this and tugs at her necklace again - oh, those are shark teeth, aren't they? Neat! Then she... opens one of the boxes and pops one of the candies in her mouth.

I try to say something, but before I do, Marina looks back at me and murmurs, "Say 'aah'."

"Eh-?"

I didn't know she could move that fast. She shoves one of the wafers in my mouth before I even finished talking. I can taste a little bit of-

Fudge and coconut sprinkles! Yum!

Then she picks up a few more boxes. "You've convinced me," she says, which, along with swallowing the tasty snack, makes my cheeks flush with pride. It makes everything hurt less for a little bit.

Marina smiles back at me before leaving, and I wave goodbye before I resume sorting things. I'm definitely getting a few boxes of those later.

Really wish I had a more normal-looking arm here. People just keep staring at it, and it's making me real uncomfortable. I… I hope I'm not driving people away by being here. It doesn't look like business is slowing down, but maybe it's just been this way ever since I came in.

No no no, snap out of it, Eleanor. Fuck. You're better than this, don't let it get to you. Just… Find something to do. You only have an hour until your shift is up. Then you have lunch, and then the training starts again.

I'm so absorbed in my thoughts that I nearly bump into somebody. I make to apologize, but-

"…Marina?" Sure enough, it's her, pushing around a cart full of those items from the promotional display.

Marina slowly turns to look at me with a sleepy smile. "…Oh, it's you. Hello again, Eleanor."

"Um, hi," I murmur, then cough before I speak up. "You need help with anything?"

She shakes her head at me, making her necklace clink on its own. "Oh, no, thank you," she assures me, "I'm back to purchase more of those chocolates."

I just kind of stare at her blankly, and then glance at her cart. Then I turn to look at the display, which is now empty. Then back to the cart, where several of the boxes appear to be empty. And finally back to her. "Marina?" I venture, "Have you been standing around the store all morning buying chocolate?"

She nods, and actually seems a tiny bit bashful when she tells me why: "...I kept running out..."

…I shouldn't laugh. I'd probably do the same if given the chance. But still, her comment had me in stitches. I'm bent double, gasping for breath as I try to stifle my laughter. Marina's giving me a bemused look, which makes me laugh even harder.

I at least –try- to be professional. "Don't…" I snort, "Don't forget to – hee hee - pay for those, okay?"

"Of course…" Marina answers, pushing her cart along towards the register. "Have a nice day, Eleanor."

I remove a hand from my mouth to give a shaky wave to her.

Okay… Okay… The thing to do now is… Is stop laughing. Stop laughing, and restock the display. Yeah.

I push my empty cart through the double doors at the back of the store and enter the warehouse in back. Well, not quite. There's big crossroads where the path splits to the left and to the right, and the one on the right is for the big stuff. Like the bouncy castles. The normal store stock is on the left, so that's where I go. Not sure what's straight ahead, other than more double doors, but somebody needs to clean that hall up. It's scuffed up real badly.

They probably keep kangaroos or something back there. I dunno. Not my problem. It gives me the creeps, anyway.

Nnnng... Why do they have to label everything back here? You're killing me here. At least I know where the things I'm looking for are at, though. Stuff that's new and on sale goes near the front of the warehouse! So it's right over... There! I carefully load three dozen boxes into the cart and head on back the way I came.

...Hee... I really shouldn't do this, but...

Putting my right foot on the little shelf on the bottom, I grab the handle and dangle myself off. Then I just kick off the ground with my left foot and ZOOM! The cart rattles loudly as I propel it forward, kicking the ground harder and faster and making a sharp turn at the intersection. Man, it's been too long since I've done this!

I think I've heard people call them trolleys before, and trolleys are something you ride on, right? So now that I've built up speed, I stand up on the basket and just ride it out the doors. I must be quite a sight, like something out of a bad commercial, but I really don't care right now. I've got a clean record, so even if I get in trouble it's only a first strike. I can get away with this much, right?

...Eh, maybe I shouldn't push my luck.

I come to a stop in front of the display from earlier and stack and stack and stack all the boxes up so that they're facing outward. Can't look like I'm slacking off, 'cause I'm not!

Omake : We Can Rebuild Her

"Why'd you have to go and put her head back?"

"It would be difficult for her to walk with her head stitched to her foot."

"Yeah, but that'd be funny!"

"It would also give away our involvement in the matter."

"Yyyyyeeeaaahhhh... But it'd totally be worth it!"

"I doubt that."

"Aw, barnacles, Jade, why're you taking her side lately?"

"I am doing no such thing."

"Yeah you are! You're even giving blood to her!"

"To accelerate her recovery. She needs to return to meditation by tonight, not sit as a corpse for a week."

"Well why can't she? It'll keep her quiet."

"If anything, you're the one acting strangely. I thought you liked her?"

"I'm just being friendly~."

"You found someone who is supposed to be indestructible, and didn't care if they died. Was somebody who could withstand an extraordinary amount of punishment not what you wanted?"

"Ehhhh, right now I'm trying to knock her off her high horses. I mean, her attitude just... Wow. I mean, geez, she even makes ME a little mad."

"Even so, Miss Cooldown made a request."

"Wellllll, Wendles said to 'watch her', and we watched her get blown to pieces, so we're doing great on that front!"

"That is almost certainly not what she meant."

"You know how Callidus aaare."

"...I suggest a different tactic."

"Does it involve blowing her up and putting her back together with a little screwball flag sticking out her-"

"No."

"Awww."

"You'll like it."

"I doubt iiit. But anywaaay, what boring, non-explodey idea do you have?"

"The outfit Miss Crunch came in was severely damaged and will need to be remade so as not to arouse suspicion."

"That's easy and not fuuun!"

"Furthermore, Miss Crunch has indicated that other than the negligee, she has no other clothes."

"...Ohhh."

"I do believe we owe her at least this much for taking us in. Considering we also tried to poison her. Don't you agree, Sister?"

"...Hee hee hee..."

Human Resources 1: Peter Rabbit

Harumi Ryouno, of the Third. Incubator's aide. Civilian.

I'd tell people I work in communications, if I hadn't pretty much blown them all off when I faked my death. Pretty good trick, I thought. Nice funeral, I'm told. To the rest of the Officio? I work HR; yeah, yeah, I know. Coincidence is a funny thing. Honest answer? Practically the Devil's right hand. Hell, it pays the bills.

...Okay, that was pretty bad.

It's a friday night like any other, which means I've got absolutely nothing to do. That probably sounds nice; I don't have my eternal soul jammed into some pretty little rock, so I get to have weekends off like the rest of us mortals. Let me rephrase that: I've got nothing to do, no one to talk to and I'm bored out of my skull. I'd kick back and waste away in front of the TV, but I can't quite stomach going back to it. Call me sentimental, but I never could watch much ever since, well, you know. Not long before I started here.

Still stings a bit, I guess.

I looked over my options again. Knew them well enough, but sometimes you'll look again, just in case you were wrong the last twenty times. ...At least, I'm hoping that's not just me. Phone I use to call no one, TV I use to watch nothing at all, mattress I don't generally bother sleeping on, fridge I keep pretty near empty because I can't be bothered with cooking for myself. It's like I don't even live here. Then there's the stupid little netbook the rabbit told me I'll need; never got the hang of the thing, just something I had to bring to the Officio one day that spends every day just shy of breaking down completely.

...Heh. Guess that's part of my job, really. At least it's better behaved than your average gem-sporting teenager.

>> ☐ Malal 10/10/14(Fri)14:36:30 No.35430131

There's a mirror too, just lying around. Handy little thing for when I need to look just right for the role I'm told to step into. This isn't one of those times. Instead, I see a tired-looking face staring out at me from the glass, brown eyes practically covered over by shaggy black hair. None of those crazy colours all the Officio kids seem to have. Never did figure out what the deal was that. Past the head, the picture in the mirror is just some lanky thing trailing across the floor behind me, wrapped up in a baggy, shapeless mess of green and grey cloth. ...It's warm and comfortable, don't judge me. Kinda nice, not having to care about this stuff.

Callidus. Might've been handy for what I do. Hah, like I'd ever take a contract.

So there's also a bottle. I'm not doing that tonight. Usually try not to. Jamming a bottle into my face late at night? Come on, that's drunkard talk unless you've got some company. Before I know it, I'm setting up a game of solitaire - always preferred it with real cards, somehow - and sweeping it right back into the box. I'll just call that one a win. Can hardly ever be bothered with actually playing.

It's funny, the things you realise now and then. Like the company you've got on a friday night, the sort of people you can expect to go to. Not the kids I work with, obviously. Bad for business, getting too attached to them. Never much cared for most of them anyway, crazy brats as far as the eye can see. Other than that... what? Lost everyone I needed to a while back, they all think I kicked the bucket.

So I look down, and I start dialing a number.

Gotta have some friends you can count on, you know? I don't have that, but I've got the next best thing. ...Maybe not the next. Definitely not the best. It's a thing, I can say that much. Any port in a storm, or something along those lines. I'm pretty sure he doesn't have anything to do at this hour, but he lets it ring three times first anyway. Warms my heart when he does that, I tell you; taught him the trick myself. Makes people think you're just a little too important for them, but you'll do them a favour anyway.

Others get nine. Three sets of three, so we can pretend he cares about a silly little number. I just get three to show me he hasn't forgotten. The rabbit's got a good memory. Thick as molasses when it comes to some things, though. He's alright when you get to know... well, maybe not, but I kind of like...

Don't feel like lying when I'm not even on the clock, so let's just say I'm not that picky sometimes.

It's kind of funny, the way I recognise his voice on the line. I mean, it's not like I could get anyone else from this number, so that helps. I don't know anyone who can quite sound like no one at all the way he does, though, all the same. It's the most boring voice in the world. Told him that once, and he almost seemed proud. He wasn't, of course, knowing him.

"Sanbey." Same way he always answered, no sprucing it up with titles, not even 'Sanbey of the Third Officio Assassinorum' or anything. Asked him about it once; he said that showed pride, and he wouldn't go the way of his brothers.

"Hey, Rabbit. Got a minute?" See, that's the nice thing about knowing he doesn't care. Get to call him what you want without him getting annoyed. 'Names are immaterial and pointless', he used to say. Even 'Sanbey' was kind of a grudging pick. Seems to think it's a bad precedent, like it'll send him off down the same way his brothers went.

"...I suppose so. Some sort of emergency?" Yeah. Yeah, you could say that.

"Nah, just felt like talking." I mean, it's not like this is the first time I've bugged Sanbey. He's used to it, and he doesn't mi- well, I guess he doesn't care enough to be bothered by it. Perks of working for an emotionless space monster, or something like that.

So here I am. Little soul-sucking alien looking like a rabbit that woke up on the wrong side of Chernobyl, and it's what I have to chat with at one in the morning. Can't understand the first thing about this funny-looking monkey it puts up with, and it's the closest I've got to family. Of course I laughed, I felt too sick to do anything else.

"Ryouno?" So he heard.

"...Ah, it's nothing, boss."

"Very well, then. Now, as you are no doubt aware, there is scarcely any reason for me to-" Oh boy, this again. Did I mention he's about as fun as a spreadsheet? ...Maybe not the best comparison, I usually end up handling some of those every day.

"Listen, I've had a bad day," not strictly true, but it wasn't exactly cloud nine either. "And if you don't get out of your ivory tower, I'm just going to have to turn into some big weird-" Hadn't really seen any witches first hand - only in photos - so it's probably a good thing he stopped me there.

"If you recall, Ryouno, you refused the contract and run no such risk." And there's the problem with a boss who's only as dumb as a sack of bricks when the mood takes him. Inconvenient. Alright, so it was a pretty bad excuse, too; again, I keep the good stuff for when I'm on the clock. Only so much effort in me.

"Yeah, I was sort of hoping you wouldn't remember. You coming over or what? I can share a glass, carrot juice or whatever it is you take. I'll let you go by the time the sun's up. We'll pretend it's... I dunno, a business meeting or something. Officio talk."

"Somehow, I highly doubt that would be your intention."

"Well, lucky you, I don't have much to talk about besides work anyway."

A heavy sigh over the line. Might have thought he meant it, if I hadn't taught him that. Little bit of emoting will get you far, even if your fluffy little alien-devil heart isn't really in it. Still weirds me out how he sounds pretty much human, though. Should be something more like... I don't know, one of those little cartoon animals or something. Not right.

"If I must." Knew it. I can usually count on him for this, who even knows why. Guess we both make our fair share of bad decisions.

"I'll leave the cat flap unlo-"

"That won't be necessary."

Doorbell rings eventually, hell if I know how he does it. Still sitting on the ground when I find him. Little guy looks just like his brother at the Ninth, but with bright blue eyes. Never could decide if that's more or less creepy, but I don't like it much. Gotta have some flair, you know? Not some kind of palette swap. Keep telling him to spruce it up a bit, maybe a tiny hat or something, but he's having none of it. Would really help him stand out, though, you know? Play up the whole mascot thing.

Then I hear about the Eighth and count my blessings.

Scoop him up and drop him on the couch; of course he doesn't mind, apathy's a fun little thing.

"Come oooooon. Not even a little smile for your favourite lackey?" Got him to blink, at least. I'm going to pretend that means I surprised him. Got to keep him on his toes, or something like that. At least be wrong enough to confuse him.

"You know perfectly well that my facial expression is non-negotiable, Ryouno." Yeah, I noticed. Weird little critter.

"Beep boop."

"...What?" Twice in a row! I'm on a roll.

"Ah, nothing. What had you cooped up in the office all day, anyhow?" I know the answer, of course. Habit. Guy doesn't have anything else to do; kind of like me, but he doesn't bother pretending.

Gets him talking, though.

"The Yumishita case," he tells me, and that's about all I need to hear. Crazy Vindicare went rogue a few weeks back, started camping out in witch barriers and shooting out the soul gems of the teams we send in. Ran off pretty much right after her training finished, too; don't know what's going on there, and Sanbey himself isn't telling me all that much. That or he really doesn't know much, wouldn't put it past him. Been digging into it whenever I get the time, though; having all those souls shot out is bad for business, you know? Gotta have her put down.

"I'll get back to to it tomorrow, then, after I've checked in on the others."

"Ryouno, I trust you are aware that tomorrow is a Saturday?"

"...Ah? Yeah, right. Forgot." Damn it, he wasn't supposed to call me on that. What am I supposed to do out here, huh? Gather dust harder? "Might as well hash out what we know, though. Not like we've got much else to do, right?"

"Hey, Peter." Mitakihara's looking nice, right about now. Cities are at their best when the sun goes down, pretty little light show off in the distance. Looked nicer a while back before some of the lights started going off, but this'll have to do. I notice I'm giving him my special three-glasses-in voice by now; good on him if he can make sense of whatever's crawling out of my mouth by now. I have to listen pretty hard to tell what I'm saying myself.

"Excuse me?" I guess I hadn't called him that before.

"Don't.... donlookatme like that, I just call rabbits what they are." That was a pretty stupid laugh. They probably all sound that way to him, though.

"That hardly seems necessary." Yeah, well, that's how you take every joke; you and most of the little soul-sucking cottonballs.

"You don't get to talk about how 'names serve no purpose' and then complain about the one I give you." I give his big, floppy ears a little tug. That was pretty clever of me, I'd like to think. I think a lot of what I say is clever, right around this time of the night. "So hey, Peter."

"Yes?" Pretty sure he tried to sound a bit resigned, right around then. No, it wasn't that good. Yeah, I could stand to teach him better.

"'Bout when you said... when you said you'd set me up to get into acting if I still want to. Never thought you meant right away. Real quick-thinking of you, sending me right off like that, into the thick of it. Never saw it coming." Aw, he thinks I'm serious. At least, that might be what the little tilt of the head means. Jokes or no, I have to say, this is probably some real good practice. Real good. Get to wondering what I'll do once I've retired from this little stage, sometimes.

"Ryouno, that was hardly my inten-"

"Shhh. Only kidding. Just relax and- whoops, sorry about that." Ended up leaning a bit to the side, using the little guy like an armrest. Squashed him a bit and he never said a word, but on the other hand, I'm not actually sure he noticed even when Yumishita put an entire giant arrow through him before she ran off. Weird little thing didn't so much as flinch, just had some kind of... of backup. Started eating the body, too. Aliens, huh?

What'd she call it, again? 'Arbalest setting' or something. Funny, she never had anything against ME. I'm sort of flattered by that, almost, but mostly proud.

"Hey, Petey? You're alright, you know." Just sort of muttered in the couch's general direction, something he's free to catch if he likes.

>> ☐ Malal 10/10/14(Fri)14:44:03 No.35430299

"Hmm?" Funny, the way we keep wasting our time together like this. I hate knowing this is what I've got, if I'm being honest, and he isn't exactly thrilled about hanging around with some human either. Thinks it's a bad sign, looking at all his brothers, and oh, does he ever harp on about how they went wrong. Not that he's annoyed, mind; always says he's above that. Pretty silly, really, but maybe I just don't get space rabbit things.

"Nah, only kidding," I tell him with the biggest grin I can manage. "You're a horr'ble little freak of nature. Don't you change, now." Turns out trying to high-five an incubator's ear when he has no idea what you're going for doesn't really work out. I would've known that, earlier today.

By the time I hear something again - or notice it, anyway - I'm out like a light, with my head on the armrest. Just about manage to pull myself up a bit and see across the room, even though it's spinning way more than I'd like. "I believe that marks sunrise, Ryouno. I will return to my office now." ...Think I might've mumbled something to him when he left. Didn't think he'd stick around, guess he figures nothing back at home's too urge-

Did I just call the office home? Weird.

Well, day's started now, nothing for it; I'll just turn in early or whatever. I shamble over to the frid- to the big cold cereal container - may as well call it what it is - and I end up laughing so hard I need to hold onto one of the wall beams to keep myself up. It's all a bit too ridiculous to do anything else.

The things we do with our time, huh? Unbelievable.

Dead Neptune - Chapter 02

Jessica jammed her fingers on the buttons headed for first floor and the one to close the elevator doors. A pair of chrome-finished walls slid into where the entrance once stood, and the steel box began falling at 50 kilometers an hour. She let out a heavy sigh, running a hand through her long, brown hair and checking the wristwatch on the other. Only ten seconds had passed and she found herself kicking the elevator door with a short thud, as if trying to make it fall faster. Dealing with stuck-up, arrogant business wasn't exactly her cup of tea.

Finally, a pleasant ding announced the Warmaster's descent and opened the doors of the elevator. The lobby was typical of a rich man's atrium, with marble floors and Solomonic columns, and oak desks. Normally, she'd take the time to appreciate the luxury of the room, but she was already gone, staying clear away from the confused faces of suits flipping through binders staring at a girl wearing a skirt and a coat.

Pushing through the revolving glass doors, Jessica checked her wristwatch again. Half an hour until her next assignment. A silver coupe pulled up in front of her, and she seated herself in shotgun as the car pulled away into the streets of Hong Kong.

"How'd it go?" Alice took a right at the first light and stopped at the next.

"It… I managed to get what I needed," Jessica took out her phone and began typing out a message. "Head over to the Phooey. We have that cash grab to do."

No one really knew who had come up with that nickname, though it was rumored to have been from some old cartoon show. It was just one of those things that stuck on and no one argued. Despite its innocent reference, the Phooey was home to the city's most notorious gangsters, a place where the right words could get you anything you wanted, provided the price was right. Even the triads had a strong presence there, just because of the city's status.

These magical girls weren't interested in economics, however. Supply and demand, shipping and logistics, none of that mattered too much. Maybe there'd be another time when it would matter, another time when they'd have to attend to things like that. For now, however, the only thing that mattered was getting money. Enough money to support their way of life, what they did. They were pirates, after all. There wasn't much else a pirate did. At least, that's what all the girls thought. They were in it for the fun and the money.

The Mustang pulled across the road from a low, white house, one that'd look perfect for raising a small family, or perhaps perfect for hiding a bunch of weapons, drugs, money, or all three. The blinds were all drawn, and the paint was beginning to peel on the vinyl siding. Alice drew a utility shovel out of her hood and rested it on her shoulder, the same calm, tired look on her face.

Jessica was the first to reach the door. She firmly knocked on the door thrice as her right hand reached down to her skirt. The door opened a crack, a flimsy chain keeping it from opening too far. In that crack, a grumpy, angry looking face greeted them.

"Who the fuck are you?"

“Huh? Get the fuck ou-“

Before the thug could finish his sentence, however, a knife found its way upward through his skull and the chain, blood soundlessly splattering onto Jessica’s clothes. She sighed and muttered a curse under her breath before swinging the door open, pushing the corpse out of the way.

Jessica pointed to a staircase on the right and nodded to Alice, who replied with a nod of her own before heading downwards. Stepping into the next room, she found herself standing before three men who sat at a table playing cards. Hearing her footsteps, they looked up and promptly got to their feet, each with a gun to aim at the intruder, but were subsequently put down with a knife in each of their throats, knocking over some of the poker chips and empty bottles of alcohol.

Halfway towards the next room, a goon with a submachine gun appeared in the doorway, firing with laughable accuracy from the hip. Jessica lunged forward, grabbing a knife from her thigh and knocked the barrel upwards, decorating the ceiling with holes. She then took a knife in her other hand and sliced into the poor goon’s jugular, leaking blood as soon as the blade sank into flesh.

She returned to the previous room and took a look around. It seemed as though there weren’t many people in here to begin with, or they were all downstairs. Jessica hoped for the former and a girl in a hoodie carrying a duffle bag and a few papers confirmed her suspicions.

“There were some drugs down there, too. You want me to grab them?”

Jessica paused for a moment, heading for the door. “Nah. Leave them. Let the next gang have them.”

They both stepped back outside, gently closing the door behind them. Alice pressed a button on her keychain and the trunk popped open, being opened farther before she threw the bag inside and slammed it shut. Both girls slid into the car again and the engine roared to life, headlights fading in the distance.

I just want to say, I really love everything to do with Yuma's whole character arc. Maybe I'm just a sucker for the whole sin/remorse/forgiveness theme, but I honestly feel that her flashback was one of the most compelling segments of writing in this quest, and the further developments to her story in this thread are a great continuation of that arc.

MAGICAL GIRL NOIR QUEST
THE FALL OF CHIAKI MATSUDA

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 10/17/14(Fri)10:01:45 No.35583032 Archived

You are a Magical Girl, and it's been three days since your successful interrogation of Beatrice Reinhardt - formerly known as Lucius the Eternal, the Peerless Swordsmaster, the Daughter of Sparda, and countless other self-preening titles.

Now currently known as the half-melted, half-scorched biological wreckage that Headquarters housekeeping had carefully scraped off of the walls and floor of the Silent Room she'd died a burning death in. A burning, shrieking, screaming death.

One that she very nearly shared with the one remaining Culexus of your Officio.

The both of them screaming with the same searing pain that would have killed any uncontracted soul ten times over.

There's an unsavory pun in there somewhere, one involving skewered meat thrown on a grill and Yuma's own rank, but you'll rip out your kneecaps first before giving voice to something like that.

>>35583032

It could have gone down a bit better, sure. You'll be the first to grudgingly agree to that optimistic assessment.

You could have accepted the honor duel that the Eversor had asked for, for one - the request made with that self-satisfied smirk on her face. You could have taken Yuma's reluctance at the task you asked her to carry out as a refusal, instead cutting your answer out of Lucius yourself with that old standby you relied on - a good knife, a good arm, and equal amounts of elbow grease and patience. Maybe those would have gotten you the answers you needed.

Or maybe Lucius would have simply changed her mind and demanded for something else again, filling your ears with bleated apppeals for a warrior's honor. A warrior's code.

You didn't do any of those things, of course. Instead, you had Chitose Yuma rip the information you needed out of Lucius' skull. Even with the Culexus warning you moments before that the information was warded, protected by something powerful, protected against this exact kind of interference - and that her going through with the extraction would result in something...well, not very nice happening. You had her do it anyway, but only after - and you find yourself stressing the distinction here, ONLY AFTER - you gave Lucius one last chance. One last chance to dig herself out of the shithole she'd gleefully, smirkingly dug herself into.

She didn't deserve one. Not after the enemy action she pulled against you back during the Kirishima operation, not after she held an entire stadium audience hostage just to get at you.

And it wasn't as if she was forced into the affair, made to follow a clearly suicidal order - the unhealthy gleam of hatred made personal shone in her eyes when she ran you through with that sword of hers, a gleam that was backlit with the sick fire of zealous fanaticism.

>>35583040

Lucius told you herself - she was killing you to stop some insane prophecy. By shoving a meter of cold, tempered steel through your spine by way of your gut, she was saving the world and everyone in it. From you. From Pinky. From god knows whatever else she thought you were capable of.

But instead of taking it, she spat it right back into your face, and then...

...You're not even going to try and recount what happened afterwards, but suffice to say the smell and sight of a Culexus being burned alive in her hardsuit isn't something you're going to forget anytime soon. By the same token, however, you also won't easily forget the look of vindicated triumph that shone in Yuma's crimson eyes, after you pulled off her helmet to reveal her ruined, scorched features. The ragged pulse of her silent voice in your head, telling you exactly what you needed to hear without her having to try and force her melted, fused-together lips apart.

She knew where Oriko was. The exact location of the Prophet's established stronghold, where Oriko and her followers would fall back after every successful attack - after every successful raid.

By paying the price of nearly being burned to death by crimson soul-fire, your Culexus had given you the key to dealing with the Prophet once and for all.

And hopefully, it's the same key that'll let you get Oriko out of this mess alive, you think as you gingerly brush your bandaged fingers against your bruised jaw. You're still keeping your promise to Kyoko, even if she saw fit to deck you hard enough for you to fall over once she found out just what happened in the interrogation.

...She apologized immediately afterwards, of course, even without Sayaka's prompting, your red-haired best friend completely in tears - but fuck, it still hurt. Even with the current Venenum Rank Leader personally attending to you - no, wait, they had another term for the position, Apothecary Primus or something - it still hurt.

>>35583063

Then again, the pain in your jaw is probably nothing compared to the pain that Yuma needed to be rendered comatose from.

Ninety percent of Yuma's entire body had been subjected to third degree burns, the Apothecary Primus - Touno Asai, you remember her name from the identification card pinned to her lapel as well as the breathy way she introduced herself - had told you after politely ushering you into the Silent Room that now served as Yuma's own recovery ward. Ninety percent of her skin cooked into insensate meat.

They had to cut away her hardsuit to treat her properly - even having to surgically remove patches of the inner lining where the suit had fused with the scorched flesh underneath. This meant that they had to work on an unclad Culexus to save her life - which mean that they were also exposed to the same nauseating, unfiltered anti-magic inherent to the rank.

To counter the effect, the life-saving operation had to be performed in another Silent Room, with its engines running full-out and focused completely on Yuma. This of course made the medical staff working on your Culexus just as sick as they would be, but not sick enough that they couldn't do their duties. Still, bucket after bucket of vomit had to be sloshed out - and those passing out from exhaustion quickly wheeled out to be replaced by a fresh Venenum, with their breakfasts still in their stomachs.

It had taken an entire day - and the entire medical staff of the Ninth Officio - to finally get Yuma stable. Touno had explained that night, as the both of you looked down on a quietly sleeping Chitose Yuma, her form once more sheathed in the studded black leather of a Culexus hardsuit - that it wasn't that Yuma's special circumstances that made it a long and difficult process, but her injuries. The nature and cause of them.

>>35583090

Apparently, the fire that had burned Yuma wasn't simply just mundane fire, or even magical fire. Either one would have been easy to fix, even with the victim being a culexus. No, what burned Yuma was something different. Something...well, evil, she'd finally said after a momentary awkward pause. It was the only way she could describe it. Evil. Cursed. The only similar incidence of it she'd seen - and even then, only in a brief imitation of it - were in fatal injuries inflicted by Omega-class Witches. Witches nearly equal to Walpurgisnacht.

They'd had to slowly reconstruct Yuma's flesh. Not the simple magic-encouraged regeneration which would take minutes, or even seconds - but gradually, painstakingly slow, atom by atom. Cell by cell. Scraping away the burned tissue and carefully urging the healthy bits left to regrow what they lacked.

This had taken, again, another day to do, while you and Kyoko and Midori waited outside, sitting vigil. Sayaka and Mami stopped by every now and then, both also clearly concerned yet taking it upon themselves to handle the Officio's day-to-day.

Wendy, surprisingly, also sat vigil with you, only going off every now and then to bring you paperwork that you needed to sign or look over, which she then brought back to Mami. Apparently you not deciding where to assign her meant that she was serving as Mami's secretary - temporarily at least, she'd replied gruffly after you inquired.

And now, on the third day, with you having taken up a temporary office outside Yuma's Silent Room - Touno Asai had finally stepped out and declared that Chitose Yuma was, for a lack of a more accurate term, healed.

"You can wake her up if you wish, Warmaster," Touno murmurs beside you. "...Or perhaps you'd like to wait for Miss Kyoko? She did ask you to call her the moment Yuma wakes up."

Yeah, Kyoko did say that. Sayaka had to bodily drag her away from another night of sleeping on the floor beside your table, with the red-haired Eversor screaming that she needed to be there, that she needed to stay.

In the end - with Sayaka pleading with you to talk sense to your best friend - you promised Kyoko that you'd call her the moment something in Yuma's situation changed. She went off with Midori, who you also insisted to go and attend to her own...stuff. Being Callidus Instructor and everything. She cooperated a bit more easily than Kyoko did, but not after a particular display of affection that you're glad Wendy wasn't around to see.

Anyway, you can either wake Yuma up now, or...call Kyoko and wait for her before doing so.

What do you do?

[]Wake Yuma up. There's something you need to talk with her about in private.

Interesting bit about the fire being cursed and evil and witchlike.

Wonder if the unknown culexus also has a GW? That might explain the evil and corrupt nature of the injuries. I assume it was the culexus that implanted the ward anyway.

Though I guess it could have been Ahriman herself that placed the ward. That would certainly explain the corrupt nature of the burns (Oriko has Ahrimans GW).

Hopefully the three stooges felt it when Yuma broadcasted her emotions to us, and how guilty she feels and how sorry she is. That should somewhat alleviate Murderfaces anger.

And if not, we can always point out how badly the Homusquad itself has screwed up (a lot worse than Yuma), and how many chances the Homus have had to try and fix things and redeem themselves (countless second chances).

Compared to that, giving Yuma a single second chance should be nothing. Murderface also seems like someone who would respect it if we stood up to her and pointed the hypocrisy of not giving Yuma a second chance.

Especially after Yuma burned herself nearly to death at our orders.

Just checking. Too many people who follow this quest have not and this greatly disappoints me.

Seriously, to anyone out there who hasn't, if you have read more than three MGNQ threads you should watch the dam anime. It is 4-5 hours long and then the movie is two. You could most likely watch the entire series before this thread dies.

Welcome aboard the funtruck! Where the shitposting is endless!

"Shadowruns" is a meme that basically refers to intense, often supremely irrational levels of paranoia, caused by reading much too deeply into the actions of other characters.

Example: Mami makes us a nice stack of pancakes.

What's actually going on: Mami being a nice person, because that's who she is.

Shadowruns interpretation: JUST ANOTHER STEP IN MAMI'S PLAN TO MANIPULATE US WITH BREAKFAST FOODS, WE ARE THE JUNKIE AND SHE IS THE DEALER

That sort of thing.

Thanks for the explanation, I'll try to keep the stupid questions to a minimum in the future.

Just one other thing - I watched the anime back when it came out and re-downloaded it for a refresher, but I just got told that the first two movies are essentially the anime. Should I just watch the anime then jump to Rebellion or just run all 3 movies?

When you watched the anime back in the day just watching the 3 movies is fine.

The first two movies tell the story once again in HD and add some now scenes/additional lines.
The third movie concludes the saga.

You should rewatch the two movies simply because you might miss some symbolism or don't understand some scenes in the 3. one.

You nod at Touno's reminder. Probably a good idea to keep your promise to the red-haired Eversor, even if she did punch you hard enough to loosen a few teeth. You excuse yourself from the Apothecary Primus and the currently-sleeping Culexus - before dialing Kyoko's number on your smartphone and then holding up the device to your ear. It's still early morning, so you'll probably be waking her up, so this'll be really slow and--

"MURDERFACE?!" Kyoko picks up and shrieks your name even before the first ring had finished, her voice hoarse and sick with the same nerve-twisted panic of someone too worried to sleep a single wink. "WHAT HAPPENED?! IS YUMA--"

You cut her off here, otherwise you'd never get a word in edgeways. "No, Yuma's fine," you spit out quickly and tersely, hoping to cut through the thick stupor of incomprehension that usually settles over anyone who hasn't gone twenty-four hours without sleep - and in Kyoko's case, a solid seventy-two. "I'm calling because you told me to call, and--"

"--BERIGHTTHEREWAITFORMEBYE!" You jerk your phone away from your now partially-deafened ear, hearing Sayaka's screamed appeals for calm coming through the device's tiny speakers as faint, desperate shrieking. The call goes dead a moment later, and you shove your phone back into your inventory, grumbling something about Eversors and being batshit insane. You move back to Yuma's bedside, your promise fulfilled, and it's here that you wait for your best friend in awkward silence - along with the other Magical Girl in the room. The conscious one, anyway.

Thankfully, you didn't have to wait long. Only a handful of minutes had passed until Kyoko, sweating through hastily thrown-on civilian clothes, burst through the deactivated Silent Room's doors - The resultant movement and noise abrupt enough and violent enough that it makes the polite and smiling Apothecary Primus very nearly jump into your arms in shrieking fear.

She managed to catch herself before it actually happened, of course, but the furiously-blushing gaze she shot you a moment later was enough to tell you just how close it came to that.

You didn't have time to wonder about that, or even ask about it, as your best friend immediately made a beeline for the somnolent Culexus on gurney, even pushing past you while doing so. The desperate concern coming off from the Eversor in palpable waves, as if her already anguished expression didn't clue anyone else in the immediate vicinity. Her one eye wide and bloodshot as she looked down at Yuma, her shoulders shaking.

"D-Doc? Murderface?" She finally calls out to both you and Touno a moment later, as if only realizing just then and there that someone else other than her and Yuma was in the room with her. "She's...she's okay, right? She's all fixed up? You said on the phone earlier, Murderface, you told me--"

You step forward and slap your best friend's shoulder, as hard as you could manage. Not to hurt the Eversor, of course, but to deliver a shock hard enough to jolt her into waking sobriety. ...It hurt you more than it did her, anyway, the effect akin to slapping concrete with an open hand. Still, it's enough to make Kyoko hiss in pain and Touno to squeak in surprise.

"She's fine. She's healed. She'll be alright." You tell your best friend, slowly, clearly, deliberately. Making her listen to you by drawing every word out. "We can wake her up now, but you have to relax. Last thing she needs is you being hysterical. You understand, Kyoko?"

For a few seconds, nothing but silence from the Eversor. And then, nodding. "Y-yeah. Okay, Murderface. I understand. I'll...I'll be cool." Another nod, before she turns towards Touno. "...Thanks, doc. Really. I can't...I can't thank you enough for saving Yuma."

Touno simply shakes her head, acknowleding Kyoko's profuse thanks with a smile. "I did promise you we'd do everything we could, Miss Kyoko." She nods at you then, before quietly and quickly excusing herself from the room - wisely deciding to allow this particular reunion to take place in private.

...You'll have to thank her later yourself. After all this.

After a few moments more - and with Kyoko herself urging you - you carefully and gently nudge Yuma awake. It takes the Culexus a full minute to stir, and when she does, it's with pain. Not crippling pain, but...enough that you yourself feel the faintest echo of it when her words blossom in your mind.

+ Warmaster...? Kyoko-san...? I...ngh...how...? I don't remember...the interrogation, I-- +

+ You did good + You have enough time to pulse this affirmation to the Culexus, just before Kyoko elbows you out of the way to hug the crispy fuck out of Yuma. Something like a vox-corrupted squeak emits from the youngest girl's helmet speakers as she weathers out the brunt of Kyoko's clearly affectionate hug - and while you do move to seperate them, to appeal for calm from the Eversor yet again, you stop yourself as you hear Kyoko crying into Yuma's padded shoulder. Letting out the tears that she'd apparently been holding back these three days.

+ This is kind of why I steered clear of Miss Kyoko for the longest time. + Yuma pulses to you. + I didn't really want her to...be emotionally involved with me any longer. I didn't want her crying over me like this. +

+ It clearly didn't work, + You point out. + She's crying now. +

If you have already seen the anime then watching the movies is probably fine.

Personally I feel the first movie is inferior to the first 8 episodes that it recaps, and then the 2nd movie is superior to the last 4 episodes.

The first movie removes several scenes (mostly ones involving Mami) to cut down on time and a I disliked a few music changes, but the animation quality is improved a bit and many lines of voice acting are redone, mostly Kyouko I think.

The second movie has the improved voice acting and animation, as well as one of my favorite bits of music (She is a Witch, plays at the very start during Sayaka's final breakdown) and does not remove any scenes that I know of, it only replaces them (Kyouko vs Octavia, and the aftermath of the fight being the two big ones). The biggest downsides are that you do not get to see how the opening/ending themes are fucked with.

Rebellion is just Rebellion.

Also if you watch the series instead of the movies be sure to watch the blu ray version, as the animation quality is massively better than the TV version.

+ That is the stupidest idea I've ever heard, + You pulse back at her, forcing as much of your disapproving frown into the psychic message. You should know - you're the best at stupid ideas. + Do something that stupid again and you'll have to get augmetic kneecaps, + you add a moment later.

+ I...I just thought it was the prudent thing to do. + Yuma bows her helmeted head, while weakly patting the still-sobbing Kyoko on the back. + I didn't want to be a burden to anyone, especially to Miss Kyoko. I didn't want her to grieve over me once I'm gone. I don't deserve that-- +

"It...it ain't nice to talk about someone while they're in the same room as you, ya know," Kyoko suddenly speaks up here, pulling away from Yuma briefly before wiping her eyes - and nose - with her hoodie's rumpled sleeve. Her voice further hoarsened and cracked by her crying. + And don't call Yuma-chan stupid, Murderface. I...I mean, she is, but ya don't need to rub it in. +

You allow yourself a small shake of your head and a smirk, before realization hits. ...Wait, did Kyoko just pulse to you? Just like a Culexus did? But how--

+ Miss Kyoko's special like that. She can pulse people naturally, like a Culexus. + Yuma replies, and it's here that you feel the sympathetic pain radiating from her slowly ebb. Either the IV attached to her arm is filling her with painkillers, or she's doing something to prevent the pain from bleeding through the pulsed connection. Either one suits you just fine, and you let out a sigh of relief as the migraine threatening to throb between your eyes fades.

+ It's a bit of a mystery, really. I don't think even Miss Malal managed to figure out just why. +

+ It doesn't work all the time, though, so it's kinda more like a stupid party trick than anythin' really useful. Gives me a headache for a day or so, too. + Kyoko winces here, before speaking in her own physical voice. "A-anyway, let's just talk the regular way, okay? We don't need to do all that pulsin' stuff."

Yuma glances at you for the briefest moment, before turning to your best friend. + You can reply normally, Miss Kyoko. I'll keep pulsing for now. I don't...feel well enough to actually talk just yet. +

"Oh? Well...okay, I guess. Just be sure to get better, alright?" Kyoko grins, catching Yuma in another hug, before rapping her knuckles on the Culexus' helmet. "And make sure ya do everything doc tells you to, including eating those nasty beets!"

...Well. Guess Yuma doesn't want Kyoko to know about her not being able to talk anymore.

So is Yuma full Rune-Balot now, or will her vocal cords be usable again after some recovery time?

On a different but related subject, it might be a good idea to ask Coobs if he can arrange for us to get a few more Culexus from somewhere. Yuma can't really be a Rank Leader when she has nobody else to Lead, after all, and if she'd had some backup to help her with the ward then the damage might not have been so bad.

No, but I think we need to take "responsibility" for this.

And I don't want Kyoko feeling resentment at Yuma for not telling her. She needs Kyoko's support, even if she's not willing to ask for it right now.

Don't worry, that would go beyond trauma and into stupid.

More likely is that when Kyoko's dad murdered her family and committed suicide, he didn't make sure Kyoko's little sister was totally dead before offing himself. Cue a bunnycat showing up to offer the dying little girl a wish...

You decide to let Yuma decide when to tell Kyoko about her not being able to talk anymore. There's keeping secrets from your best friend, and then there's being lousy with other people's secrets.

Instead, you ask the one remaining Culexus in your Officio about what she learned from Lucius. Where Oriko is.

+ She's...well...+ Yuma seems to hesitate here, as if unsure of what she's about to say, before forging onward. + I know it sounds crazy, Warmaster, but Oriko's base of operations is in the Akashic Realm. +

...Wait, what? She's IN there? She's in that giant barrier?

"The A-Kashyyyk Realm?" Kyoko's one eye widens here. "What, we're gonna have to fight Wookiees to get to Oriko? I--OW! MURDERFACE!"

You hiss in pain as you massage your stinging palm, fresh from slapping Kyoko's shoulder in an attempt to silence the Eversor, before turning to the Culexus again. She's sure? This isn't some sort of overwrought trap set by Oriko or whoever, to get you to march into the hell behind reality? ...And how does she know about the Akashic Realm, anyway? That's supposed to be classified information--

+ Miss Malal taught me enough. + Yuma shakes her head. + And no, Warmaster, this doesn't feel like deception to me. This information is - well, was - something that Lucius truly believed in. ...Unless, of course, she was deceived in the first place to lead us there, which means that Miss Oriko had planned her to fail, be captured and be interrogated like this. And that is just impossible, no one can plan that much in advance--+

+ Not even someone who can see the future? + You interrupt her. + Like a Prophet? +

+ ... + Yuma is silent for several moments before shaking her head again. + I'd argue that prophecy and progonostication shouldn't be relied on too much, because not even Miss Malal could predict the future with a hundred percent accuracy. + There's a bit of a guilty tone in her psychic words then, before she forges on. + Still, even with that, I don't think this is a trap. If it is, it's something I can easily get us out of. + She reaches up to tap the side of her helmet.

Oh? How can she do that, then?

+ Teleportation. With the knowledge I got from Lucius and with the help of Kyuubey's teleporter, I can get a five-person kill-team into the exact spot that's supposed to be Oriko's headquarters. If it turns out to be something it shouldn't be, then I can get them out just as quickly. +

"That doesn't sound too bad, I guess?" Kyoko wonders aloud. "But what's this Akashic Realm thing? Is it some kinda barrier or something...?"

You'll explain to her later, you tell the red-haired Eversor. You turn back to Yuma. How soon can she set this up? This teleportating kill-team thing?

+ Within the day, Warmaster. Just let me...recuperate a bit, first. + Even with her visor down, you can tell she's smiling. + Just let me catch my breath, and I'll approach the Incubator directly. That should give you enough time to arrange a kill-team, I think. +

Well. Seems that you now have a way to Oriko's headquarters. If it doesn't turn out to be a trap.

What do you do?

[]Go with this plan, make arrangements for your kill team.
[]What are the chances that this could be a trap?

Need to talk to the stooges. It sounds plausible but this sounds like a plan of the prophet, or her rider, to lure us into the Akashic Realm.

I want to know exactly how much shit we'll be in given she'll likely be at her best in there.

This is too much like letting her dictate the playing field, but at the same time it doesnt feel like we can't let her work unhindered.

12:04, little cafe on the corner of fuck if I remember, and Green Green was supposed to meet me for lunch. We agreed to disguises - personal reasons for her, and to dodge Shiraki, the Prophet, and god knows who else for me. Said I'd know her when I saw her. I tried to oblige in the same way.

...Probably still on her way. Wasn’t like everyone just…showed up for lunch right at twelve, on the dot. That would be retarded, and impossible. I was still wound up from the crisis from that morning and, even more than that, the meeting after. The meeting with Matsuda and her gang, where they stared us down like a pack of rabid animals that were about to turn on them.

+Yeah, fuck those guys. Bet we could get away with firebombing their HQ or…something.+ A not-voice bubbled up from the seat across from me. …Nico still loomed over me, with her eyes gouged out and her mouth ripped open, oozing something black and awful. A parody of a god damn amazon, dripping and towering and moving in ways a human shouldn't quite be able to.

I ran a quick check on my disguise again in my head. Neat black hair like Kong’s, fluffed out a little with little round, red glasses. Filled the body shape out a bit, and meshed her facial features with Karasawa’s. Mayumi was a little taller than me, so I had to deal with that too, and it came with the usual sort of awkward feeling. Thickened my vocal chords a little, changed my jacket color, good enough for…whatever. Good enough for her to get the idea.

Maybe good enough to impress her.

Generally, when you steal a nuke, unless you happen to have the right crew of engineers, you aren't going to be able to "Just take the warhead."
They're wired into the rest of the missile too. Also most ICBMs have redundant fail-safes for this kind of deal.

A lot of modern ones will not arm until they reach reentry velocity.

"I'm not lighting their HQ on fire," I mumbled out loud. Shouldn't make a habit of that. Didn't care, right at that moment. "I'm trying to be cool. Okay? You remember what it means to be cool?"

+Yeah. Do you?+ Nico stuck a long, mutant tongue out, caked in black ichor, in what was I guess supposed to be a childish gesture.

12:05. She was coming, right? Of course she was coming. Ninth Officio was a couple of blocks away, Tenth wouldn't give her slack OR credit for her work...Seventh, maybe? They had people all over. ...Probably Ninth.

12:06. Fuck. This was a mistake. She probably had better shit to do than-

"Dreamy?" A gentle, sweet voice sounded from behind me, with a tiny hint of hesitation to it. I waited a second, then glanced back and nodded. She seemed relieved, flashed me a soft smile. …Miracle Midori. She came as Miracle Midori, of course she came as Miracle Midori. Made me feel a little self-conscious. Probably looked like an asshole. Or a stalker. Or something.

"…Get here okay?" I grunted out as she settled in opposite me, Nico squeezing out of the way and settling into the booth behind her. …Looked like she planned on looming there for the whole fucking date. Wonderful.

Not date. It wasn't a date. Shit.

"Ahh, it was kind of a busy morning, so I got out a little late…sorry!" Her eyes sparkled. Shouldn't have been a surprise, but her Midori disguise blew all the times I'd tried it to shit. Probably put a lot of time into it, or maybe…that was just what she looked like? I'd hit it. "You haven't been waiting too long, have you?"

"…Just got here," I mumbled, hunkering down in my seat a little. …Fuck. Alright. Get it together, Cooldown. You pretend to be people for a god damn living. Just…think Mayumi. Think Murder Mayumi.

+Oh man, her hair smells great.+ Nico leaned in right next to her ear, drooling onto her shoulder. A fruity scent I couldn't pin down filled my nose, seemed to fill my whole head, left me feeling a little dizzy. I pulsed, a quick, lazy Callidus check. Just…needed to make sure that wasn't…what she was doing. The smell thing. Shit. Would that even tell me?

Green frowned a little and brushed her hair away, her hand passing through Nico's face.

"Hey, we agreed…" We agreed that disguises were okay. That we wouldn't try to tear them away or dig around or…whatever.

"Yeah. …It wasn't that. …Long morning." I tried to offer a smile, but it was weak and awkward and shitty and a huge mistake, fuck me.

"I understand." Her expression brightened, and when the waitress came around again, we ordered. …She was cute. The uniform'd look great on Green.

…12:14. I was nursing my coffee and she hadn't let go of her tea. Started just…kind of looking over there. Neither of us had spoken for a couple of minutes.

+So you're pretty much going to bang her, right?+ Nico'd moved to the side of the table, sitting weightlessly on the edge. She changed into one of the waitress uniforms, just to fuck with me. +Like, that's the plan? Because we've got like fifteen minutes to get her into a bathroom stall if we want anything more than a shitty quickie.+

"… …I really like your work. Your, uh. …Recent work. …Knew someone a lot like Mayumi, so…" Green perked up when I started talking again and nodded.

"Right, she reminded you of your girlfriend, right? …Sorry! Sorry..." A grin, an honest one, cracked my face as she stammered a little.

"…It's fine. She's gone." It wasn't fine, but I'd lie through my teeth all I needed to to keep Green around. "Better to move on. …Looking for something new, anyway." That much was true; I had so much of my own shit to deal with lately, I wasn't sure if I even wanted to get wrapped up in Matsuda's any more than I already had.

Our eyes met and she made a little noise, an awkward laugh. I couldn't quite keep the smile off of my face. …Until I noticed Nico making jerk-off motions in the air and…maybe rolling her eyes? Wasn't sure she could even do that.

+Would you knock that shit off?+ I forced my smile to stay as much as I could. …I could manage that much, I wasn't so fucking green I couldn't fake an expression. Most days. …She was looking for it, looking for what changed. Shit.

+It's not like I have anything else to do. You've been working up this wicked revenge boner and all you're fucking DOING with it is hoping Green will drop to her knees and put her fucking mouth on it.+ She froze for a second, then the enormous, dripping slash on her face widened, almost all the way up to her ears. Her hand turned black and indistinct, then reshaped itself into the shape of one of Real Nico's cleavers.

+I could start cutting her up. You want me to start cutting her up? Could pretend she's Matsuda's little slut. They look a lot alike, don't they?+

"Hey." I stood as much as I could at the booth and banged my fucking thighs on it, hissing out a couple of choice curses.

"W-what's wrong? Is everything okay…?" Vivid red eyes lit up with worry, and I eased myself out of the booth.

"…Uhh." I tried to think fast. Shit. I was usually better at this. Shit! "…Do you wanna…"

+Go to the bathroom?+

"Go to the bath…back? …Go out back? Get a smoke?"

+Hah, no way, it fucking worked!+

"…O…kay." She nodded slowly, and we slipped out after leaving a few crumpled bills on the table. …Barely even touched that coffee.

It was a relief to have an excuse to just…lean up against a wall and smoke. Easiest thing in the world. Easy to look like you're in control. Easy to look like you know what you're doing, like you're-didn't. Midori didn't, didn't like Mayumi doing it. I held the pack out anyway, and with some trepidation, she took a cigarette. Fumbled with it a little, slipping it between two fingers, then into her mouth.

+A mysterious and super awesome scary badass. You really think that's gonna get her panties dripping?+ Nico followed us, of course she followed us. She was mocking me, leaned up against the opposite wall, bullshitting her own face-fucked Miracle Midori disguise. Guess she was getting in the spirit of "… …You smoke?" Bet she things.

"…Um, can you light it?" she murmured awkwardly a second later, and I held back a snicker. My lighter was already out, a big, fat, gold motherfucker with an eagle on it. I leaned in toward her and lit both of them at once, then inhaled nice and deep.

The cigarettes here were cheap vending machine trash, and I wasn't sure if magical girls could even really get addicted to the shit. But the ritual of it was…yeah. It was calming. Helped me center. Helped me get a grip again. I could feel Nico pressing up against my psyche, making sure she got to stick around even after I collected myself. …Whatever. She wasn't even pissing me off much today.

Might have actually jumped when Green started hacking it up next to me, though, clutching her cigarette in one hand while she coughed into the other.

“Sh, shit…” After her coughing settled down, she shot a sheepish smile up at me. “…I spent years trying to get my mom to quit, now look at me, huh…” Snorted at that, a little blast of hot smoke drifting out of my nostrils.

“Wouldn’t worry about quitting, cupcake. Looks like you can’t even start.” It was hard to keep the grin off my face. She glowered up at me, looked like she might try to hit me for that one. Her expression softened fast, though, and she let out a defeated snicker.

“Well…people offer all the time, but this is the first time I’ve said yes.” After a moment of deliberation, she brought the cigarette back to her lips and took another, apparently smaller drag. Managed to hold it in this time. Mostly.

+You took her smoke cherry! Congratulations, you can pretend that means something I guess.+ She was going to be bitching all day, seemed like.

“Well…work’s been stressful, and you asked, so…” Green shuffled her feet, and we smoked in silence for a few minutes.

Thing is they still have human reactions to chemicals. So if we drop something like mustard gas they would still have issues with their throat being sealed shut and their eyes being swollen.

It also would do no damage to the soul gem.

12:27.

“So…you get pretty nervous when you’re not used to someone, huh?” I could already tell she was trying to get me back for laughing at her before. …It was working. I scratched at the back of my neck and looked away from her, lighting up another cigarette. I saw her edge in closer out of the corner of my eye, and grunted before she could ask again.

“Pretending to be Mayumi won’t save you, Dreamy.” After a second, she poked me in the arm with a manicured fingernail. Then a little higher. Then my cheek.

“… …I don’t do social calls. Most people can’t handle-“

“-coming face to face with a real monster.” She finished for me, and I tensed up. Shit. “I wrote that line. I told you, pretending to be Mayumi won’t save you.”

“…Y….yeah.”

+Stab her. Come on. It’ll make the problem go away, right? She’s stepping to you. Are you just gonna take that from some illusory manga bitch?+ My knife materialized in my hand, as if goading me to just listen to Nico and take the easy way out. I forced it away again with a few sparkles of light. …If Green saw the glint of the blade, she didn’t say anything about it.

“Sooo you like to paint, right?” Oh thank god, she had something else to talk about. “Tell me a little more about it.”

"…so we spent all this time thinking that she'd been kidnapped, but it turned out she'd just eloped without telling anyone and it left a really big mess." Green realized it was easier for me to talk about work, eventually. I managed to goad her into a couple of stories, too, although I kept mine to the…less gory ones. The clean ones, the ones that almost sounded heroic. The ones I'd tell Elly.

"…Couldn't handle that kind of job, myself. I'd just get pissed off and start…I don't know. Shaking down yaks. With my knife." I'd ended up flipping it in my hand while we talked. It was…easier? Maybe I wanted to show off a little. Disguised it just enough, I hoped. Weren't exactly a lot of girls that ran around with magical kitchen knives.

"You really only do one kind of job, huh…" …When she put it that way, it was a little embarrassing. I flipped my knife as high into the air as I could, then snatched it on its way down, bringing the point a few millimeters from her nose. She didn't flinch. My arm fell back to my side after a second, and I lazily tossed it from hand to hand instead.

"…I can do others." I hadn't in recent memory, but I could. I could change the weather with my fucking imagination, for chrissakes, of course I could do something stupid like track some asshole down or…whatever.

"It's okay, I mean…I think it's kind of cool. I couldn't do that, though…I, um. I'd rather help people, whenever I can. Reunite families, or rescue people, or-"

"Midori stuff."

"Yeah…Midori stuff." She beamed at the comparison. …Some people really weren't comfortable with the reality of our lives. Guess it made it easier for her to think she was doing something a little heroic. "And you do Mayumi stuff, huh?"

"…Guess so." …And for some of us, it was easier to let our demons loose on whoever the fuck got in the way. An optimist might say that was one way someone as screwed up as we…as I was could help people. I wasn't an optimist, but I wasn't gonna stop her from sugarcoating it if she wanted.

…1:18. When I checked my phone, she checked hers, then squeaked out a curse.

"I'm really, really sorry, I've gotta fly. I was supposed to be back twenty minutes ago." …Yeah. Probably had to get back myself. I nodded, though, and after a second of hesitation…

"…Couple blocks? QB Heavy?" She froze dead and opened her mouth.

"N-no. I mean, yes, but-"

"I'll walk you. …Don't plan on going inside or anything, just… …you know. …I'll walk you."

Green blinked for a second, then nodded slowly. Then again, quicker, with a smile.

"I think that'll be okay. …You're really a lot nicer than you want people to notice, huh?"

"…Whatever." The both of us said it at the same time. She flashed me a shit-eating grin, and by the time I could respond, she was already on her way out of the alley.

…We made plans for this weekend. Provided work doesn't assfuck us. Think I'm really looking forward to it.

Human Resources 2: Guardian Angel

'Transformation'.

I was sort of proud of it, in a way, having an authentic costume to blend in. Getting into it every day, moving around in it, that sort of thing? Not so much. The sacrifices we make for our life's work, or something like that. On the bright side, it gets the effect down - makes the right sort of impression on anyone who sees it - and isn't that what this is all about in the end?

Pure white getup, bit of gold here and there. Goes the whole nine yards; glitter, ribbons, all of it. Even has a little pair of flappy, feathered wings. Goddamn ridiculous, like someone let a ten-year-old outfit all of heaven. I've heard them call me 'guardian angel of the Third'. Obviously, I love hearing it worked, the whole angel look and stuff. Still feel like a bit of a clown in it sometimes, though. At least I got to pick mine. Not having to walk around looking like some sort of Hell's Angels reject is a plus, too.

The Third Officio Assassinorum. The perfect Officio, or at least, that's the story we've been spinning. A wonderful world where magical girls didn't transform into witches - so obviously we never tell them it can happen - where no one was a ticking time bomb, where the incubator looked after everyone's needs and his aide really, truly cared, wanted only what was best for everyone there. ...Rabbit had a sort of gentleman's agreement with the other incubators, that they wouldn't rat us out. Coobs looked up to him, so that was that - even got a Callidus of his to fix up a fake soul gem for me - and the Tenth... come on, who likes 'em enough to listen? If someone at home gets the wrong idea, it's as simple as calling a hit.

Peter and I, well, we go a while back. Let's just say the guy doesn't have a clue about how to deal with actual humans, so I offered to help him along. His helper. The one that keeps everything running smoothly, gives him ideas on how to run the show, that sort of thing. Make sure people know what they need to know and nothing else, clear things up before anyone goes off the deep end; well, more than they already have, with the head cases he hauls in sometimes. It's like herding cats, most days. They still think I'm one of them, Callidus by trade, just too important to join them on their missions. Perfect older sister to the lot of them, doing all of this for years now and telling them everything they need to know about being a magical girl.

Incubators can't lie, or they think they're above it, I was never quite sure. Either way, Peter was smart enough to put me in charge of information. I slip up, sometimes. Oversights happen. The Third keeps being the perfect Officio. It's an easier pitch, what can I say?

I make sure my pearly white soul gem's nice and visible on its choker, so everyone gets a good look at the pretty little rock. Walk in through the door with a smile and a wave, greeting everyone I meet; it sort of blurs together. First name, last name, nickname of choice, whatever it takes. Of course I knew all their names, even the ones that just joined yesterday. Especially the ones that just joined yesterday. It was my job, I couldn't very well slip up. The kids loved it, first-hand attention from one of the local big-shots. Stop to chat with a couple of them, ask them what they're doing, how their day's been, that sort of stuff. Bring up something they wouldn't expect me to know or care about, that always gets them.

Whole Officio's best friend, after all. Why wouldn't I know what to say?

Might call it slacking, if you didn't know it was my real job. I swing by the rabbit's office eventually, pick up some files and dig into paperwork. Office supplies, weapon and medical shipments, towering stack of priceless Venenum toys, the works. Adding a couple new recruits to the database, and... ah, yeah, a funeral on Officio premises. Sometimes the kids don't have anywhere else to go for that. Managed to talk the boss into a couple things lately, too; stocks, grabbing hold of a couple import companies, stuff like that. Take a page from the Ninth and rake in some extra funding. Downside is, it just about doubled my workload at the desk for the moment.

...It's kind of a weird place, here. All too futuristic to look real, at least to me. Hovering chair, little disembodied-looking glowing screens that he opens up for his phonecalls, scrolling rosters everywhere, text flashing on all the walls just enough to give me a migraine if I look up from my big old desk next to his. ...Asked him once if he was just pulling my leg or doing those for show, like all that fancy scrolling Matrix stuff. Turns out they can read a whole lot more at once than we can, and he even sounded surprised that I can't. Incubators. None of them know the first thing about humans, far as I can tell; mine sure doesn't.

Quick briefing aside, we don't talk much, only so much to say to each other even when we're sharing a room. To be fair, he's always pretty distracted during the chats with his brother over at the Ninth. Do they even have brothers, or is it a figure of speech? Well, never mind, it's not important. Heard it was a pretty big deal, being allowed to just sit in for their talks, but I never paid much attention. Looks like he's pretty much given up about the new nickname, though. That'll be fun.

After the apocalyptic landscape we saw in our last timestop, I am kind of wondering if our timestop is linked to these Akashic Realms. I mean Pinky can only appear in the timestop, so maybe we shift dimensions towards the realms when we timestop.

Maybe using the timestop in the Akashic Realms would instead shift us towards the real world. Or possibly into something even worse than the Akashic Realms.

Let's see, all done here, and... right, she's been looking a little off lately. Time to take a quick trip underground. Place freaks me out a bit, honestly, but you get used to that around these people. The elevator clunks downward for a while, through a little metal shaft into what might as well be a bomb shelter. Who knows why they kept the place hidden, much less this well protected. What I do know is that no one gets in without- oh, no, scratch that. There's a moth right there, tackling the lone light bulb like some stupid, fluttery battering ram.

Well, most of us are supposed to be here. That's just going to have to do.

The prediction engine - really just a placeholder, I should come up with something for the rabbit before 'oracle cellar' sticks - is a pretty stark kind of place. Never liked it. Bare steel all around and bright white lights embedded in the ceiling, with more glare than anyone in their right mind could like. It's very... clean. Sterile, I guess. There really isn't much to look at anywhere, except for the big, obvious stream running down the middle of it.

People - and by that I mean the local sparkler brigade - called it the River of Tales. It'll do. A little stream running down the middle of the room, from nowhere and to nowhere as far as I can tell. Petey never said a whole lot about just what was going on with it or where it came from. Looks and acts like paper and water at the same time, never got how. Blank paper, according to any Culexus who's seen it; me, I see... all sorts of things in it, some of which might have happened. So do most. Call it a trance, I guess, or a flashback to some memories, some of them from outside your life, others from stuff that hasn't happened. Once in a while, it's something you'd rather forget.

The ones we have working with it - dipping their hands in and staring in around the clock - say that it tells stories. Sometimes yours, sometimes other people's. What happened before, what could have been, what hasn't happened yet. Whole thing creeps me out, and I'd rather the room had something else in it. Luckily, there's someone right here already. Knew that coming in, obviously, else I wouldn't bother dragging myself out here.

Hitomi Masame. Vanus and Prognosticatrix. Don't ask me how the Incubators come up with anything that fancy, I would've thought they'd come up with something unbelievably dry, and yet... what even is that? Latin? Maybe I should ask, some time. Prize catch, anyway; I told the rabbit to start hunting down cripples, ill kids, the ones that are about to die, that sort of thing. Bingo, flood of contractees right away, in case he had any doubt about why he keeps me around. Not like he didn't do it before - most of them do - but he didn't look nearly hard enough. Got him to own a couple of the local hospitals and orphanages too, while we're at it. Smooths things out.

Blind, originally. Stylish as it might be, a blind seer isn't all that much use, and she didn't like the idea of not being able to see, either. The wording was our saving grace, 'I want to know what's in front of me again'. Twist it around a bit, and voila, we've snagged ourselves a prognosticatrix with perfectly good eyes. Not enough of those, though it's starting to look like we might get another before too long. Got to keep an eye on that. ...No pun intended.

She turns around with a scatter of bright orange hair, and looks at me with this big, happy smile. Makes the kid's day whenever anyone comes down here. ...Stare still weirded me out a bit, though. Never got rid of that milky-eyed look, even though she can see just fine. I make sure to meet it with a wave and just as bright a smile. I hear the dripping sound from her hands when she takes her hands out of the river - it rustles a bit when she does - but I don't see any water. Stopped trying to make sense of the thing ages ago. She hurries over to me, and not for the first time, I'm surprised that she can move anywhere in that big white robe of hers. ...Well, mostly white. It didn't need those big eyes on it, surely, even if it's her transformed getup. Come on, that's just creepy.

"Miss Ryouno!"

"Shh, what did I tell you about being so formal? It's just Harumi. We're friends, aren't we?"

A quick little nod, enthusiastic, while while I ask her how she's been doing and cheer her up a bit. Ate it right up. She's getting the usual stream of nightmarish visions around the clock, apparently.

"And you, Harumi?" Still a bit hesitant, like she thinks she shouldn't be saying it. Like it's all some kind of test to see if she can keep formal under pressure.

"Suuuuper secret spy stuff," I answer, same way I often do, with a wag of my finger and a whole lot of exaggerated sneaking over to give her a quick hug.

"You can't tell me?"

"I can't tell you, sorry. ...But don't worry," I add after a bit, like some kind of consolation prize, "it's not that interesting."

"What's it like?"

"You keep standing around trying to blend in, trying to look like you fit in perfectly, waiting around on pins and needles for just the right moment to hear something, or drop the two words you need to. ...Like I said, it's not that exciting." Shouldn't have, really, but I got a kick out of hiding in plain sight, the little hints I gave away. Call it a perk of the job.

"That... that sounds tiring." Hah, she's the one looking all worried now, that's rich.

"Oh, I'm sure it's nothing, Hitomi. Don't look so down!" Flash a smile and give her a little poke on the cheek. It's nothing between us, right?

"Besides, it's nothing so important - a lot of people can sneak around, it's just what a Callidus does, but how many can see into the future? We're counting on you, Hitomi." Everyone likes hearing they're important, or at least, most do. She brightens up a little at that, but I can see the bags under her eyes. Told me before that the visions get worse when she sleeps.

"You look a bit worn out, why don't you take a break? I can get you a cup of cocoa or something if you like; I'm sure we can both spare a little while to relax."

"...That would be nice."

I get a pair of thermoses - thermi? Never could get it straight, but it beats a cup for an elevator ride - ready, and swing by to see if I can catch a certain someone on the way. Not that her and Hitomi were that close, but the little oracle was at her best around a Culexus. Someone who'd damp the visions for a bit. Everyone wins, if only because the average Culexus is thrilled to chat with a magical girl who isn't dropping her breakfast on the floor after a minute's conversation.

Megumi Minakata, Culexus. Unluckiest girl I've ever met. Some kind of... witch's dying curse or whatever. Drags her off to every bit of misery and grief it can get her into, usually gets someone or the other caught in the fallout. Damned pain. Ends up sleepwalking into barriers, too. Joke's on the curse, obviously; not like a Culexus can witch out. Real walking disaster area, but she's more or less latched onto me; good job, me. Again, anyone who doesn't get sick from standing around her, I guess. Or actually calls her by her name.

...Heh. 'Cordy', like that freaky little mushroom. Of all the nicknames the kid could get. Good one, really. If it isn't, whatever, I've laughed at worse. Handy to have her around, though. Who else are we supposed to call when we need something picked up from a tall shelf? Heard she can do other stuff, too, but I never saw much use for it. Counting myself lucky that the whole mind-reading thing takes more than a brush on the shoulder or whatever. I call her when I catch sight of her, give her a little wave.

"Harumi. How could you tell?" Really. She thought every trainwreck in a suit looks the same to me, huh? Shame on me if I can't tell them apart. Bit weird for me, though, dealing with her alongside the kindergarten squad of the rest of this Officio, or most of them, really. She's only- well, I don't like thinking about my age. Let's just say she's only a couple years younger than me. Grouchy one, too, around most people.

"...Sorry. Not used to people knowi-"

"Please, Megumi, try to relax, I was only joking. And don't worry about the others, they're just a little shy! In fact, I know someone who wanted to see you right now! Would you mind heading downstairs with me to the River? Hitomi would love to see you, I'm sure, and you sound like you could use a break yourself." She sounded like a lot of things over the vox, but she usually liked a bit of time off, so I hazarded a guess this time.

"Right. Moving now. ...Thanks. Coming?" Not one to mince words, her. Never use ten words when you can use one. Never use more than one when you need two, come to that, from some of what I've heard. She has her moments, but I can't drag her out of her shell all that often. She had this little skip in her step when she marched over to the elevator, though. She was a lot easier to read than she liked to think, sometimes, and that's saying something when you're behind a helmet all day.

Well, I could spare them half an hour or so before I leave them with each other. They're both the types that could use a little break.

Shimizu Yumishita. The name blinks at me from a brand new monitor, arrived just today. Let it never be said that the Third Officio doesn't have barrels of cash to throw at whatever it can think of. Not as much as the Ninth, mind you, but it's a given for most of the Officios to some extent. Unfortunately, throwing money at a crazy little Vindy who runs around shooting out soul gems in witch barriers doesn't accomplish a whole lot. I suppose it might make her richer, but that's not quite what we're going for.

...Going to need a team to take her out soon enough, huh. Nothing I haven't organised before, just need to watch out for the backlash from these things. No one likes it when a hunt's called, but against a target like this, it'll probably go over easily.

"Better kill this one fast, Petey."

"Whatever her tactics, she is only one Vindicare, and a relatively new one at that, in spite of her competence. You may be overestimating-"

"It's not about a gun, bow or whatever else she's got. She's picked up on a couple things we don't need her to know. ...Lucky for us, she's real sick, so I don't know how much she can do. Keeping her together should cost her soul gem a lot as it is." Funny that she'd go in sick with something like this and not wish for a cure. Gets me curious enough to look at that bit of her file. Ah. Yeah. Yeah, that makes sense.

Crazy little brat snoops around a while, stalls her wish for ages and then finally comes to the door to ask for it. Basic training and she's out, leaving us with her cross-country murdering spree. If only she'd stick to killing people, this might not be such a huge deal. A loud sigh, somewhere in the room. Thinking back, it must have been mine, the rabbit doesn't do that sort of thing much. I think I'm starting to piece it together, and it only makes me more sure that we're not talking her down. Kill team it is, and hopefully they don't get wiped out. Assuming we can get enough sense out of the River for once to even figure out where she is, anyway.

The next name flashing on the list is all it takes to convince me. Atsuko Yumishita.

"...Yeah, I'm pretty sure she's out for blood. Would explain why she put a bolt through you, too."

Joy. Sure didn't pull punches when it came to giving me messes to clear it up, but who did? ...Well, the clock, for one. Looks like my shift's over. I've got a night to think this over, minimum.

Guardian angel of the Third, out.

Treasure Hunter Elaine

Chapter 1: Tomb Raider

My name is Elaine V. Lilian. I'm a Callidus of the 14th officio, and – clink

–And… what was that…?

I turn around, looking back the way I came down the ancient stone gallery. The grand gallery of the pyramid to be precise. The tunnel wasn't all that wide, maybe four feet at the most, and it wasn't much taller. The ancient path was gently sloping up, leading me towards the king's chamber in the center of the pyramid. The walls of the grand gallery and the hieroglyphs on them were illuminated by the yellow light from my soul gem. The light wasn't all that bright, I couldn't see anything more than ten feet away from me; the rest of the pyramid was pitch black.

I turn forwards again and lift my foot up, and look down to see the stone tile I stepped on slowly rise back into place.

What.

This pyramid is trapped. This pyramid is trapped with a pressure plate. That… that doesn't happen in real life. You don't find pressure plate traps in pyramids. China, sure. But in Egyptian pyramids…you only find traps like that in movies. Did… did I fucking wander onto an Indiana Jones set by mistake or something? Should I expect Nazis to ambush me the moment I exit the pyramid or something? Russians? Commies?

A few seconds later, I could hear a rumbling ahead of me and feel the floor beneath my feet shaking.

Oh fuck me with a rusty rake, that's a fucking boulder. I've wandered onto the set of Raiders of the Lost Ark without knowing it, haven't I? That must be what happened, no other explanation makes sense. Well, it could be one of the other movies if I'm not on the set of the lost ark. One of the others must have had at least one boulder trap in it.

Despite my best attempts at disbelieving the trap into non-existence, I could hear the boulder coming closer and feel the floor shake even more violently.

She's imaginary! Sort of. This ended up being an opportunity to focus on her as something other than a prickly voice in Wendy's head, although her proper appearance is kind of long overdue. (She's shown up in passing for a sentence or two at a time, but it wasn't really set apart from Wendy's own internal monologue, because it didn't occur to me to just use the pulsing markings for her dialogue until recently.)

Well, I'm not running back down the ascending passage to the entrance or jumping down a couple stories in the greave's shaft to get out of the way; it would take me far too long to make my way back, magic or not. So instead, I cheated.

I turned and faced the wall, somewhat disappointed that I was going to ruin the hieroglyphics on it. Using my magic, I stuck my whole arm into the wall, as far as it would go. The stone of the wall let my arm through, as if it was made out of clay. I then started scooping out large sections of the wall until there was a space large enough for me to squeeze into.

Just in time too. Not a few seconds after I jammed myself into the hole, the boulder rushed by me and slammed into the entrance to the ascending passage.

To anyone else that might have worried them more than a bit, having the only exit sealed off, but like the wall, I can dig though the boulder as well when I need to leave.

But for now, I exit the hole in the wall that I dug and continue on my way to the king's chamber, where all of the treasure is.

I was interrupted before by that out of place trap, so let me start my introduction again. My name is Elaine V. Lilian. I'm a Callidus of the 14th officio, and I'm a treasure hunter. I'm blonde, about 5'8" tall and I usually wear a black t-shirt and jeans when I'm not in my costume. My magical girl costume… Well, it's a simple blue dress that turns white at the skirt. The white sleeves go to my elbows and the tiny amount of frilliness at the end is still too much for my taste. On top of the dress is white leather duster that reaches down to my ankles and is way too fucking hot to wear in the desert, or the jungle, or anywhere else on earth. At least the pyramid is cool enough to wear it. As hot as it is and how odd a white duster is, I have grown attached to it.

Rewinding to the bit about being a treasure hunter, it's exactly what it sounds like. I travel the world, find temples and ruins, and take whatever is in there that isn't nailed down. Thank the gods for the large inventory to stash things in.

As for actually breaking into pyramids, temples, tombs and such, it's pretty easy most of the time. Using my magic, being able to mold and shape any solid material I can hold in my hands, I can pretty much dig into tombs and get through blocked passageways rather easily. In fact, that's usually what I end up using my magic for, as well as for disabling traps.

Right… traps. That boulder was absolute bullshit. I can't even to begin to understand why the flying fuck that was here. That's Hollywood-tier traps. I can't even watch most of the movies that deal with ancient ruins because of how wrong they are most of the time.

Anyway. The ancient Egyptians did not do boulder traps, it wasn't their style, let alone boulder traps hooked up to pressure plates. If you want pressure plates, head to China and enter the Mausoleum of Qin Shi Huang. You'll find more than enough working automatic crossbows hooked up to pressure plates there. The Egyptians, as well as most civilizations that buried valuables with their dead, preferred more subtle traps like putting poisonous powders like hematite on the floor for you to slowly breathe in and die as you explore the pyramid. Poisonous powder that is suspiciously absent in this tomb.

Oh well, hopefully I'll find a few answers as to why this pyramid is so fucked up trap wise in the king's chamber.

It wasn't long before I made it to the king's chamber. There was a pitfall or two along the way, but those were easily circumvented.

As for the king's chamber itself, it was massive compared to the ascending passageway. It had to be at least twenty by twenty feet in size, and at least ten feet tall.

…It was also empty. Scratch that, the place looked like it was ransacked. The sarcophagus was empty, the few urns in the room were shattered, and there wasn't a single valuable left in the place.

So then I began looking for the fake wall that led me to the REAL King's Chamber.

Yeah, the Egyptians were actually this paranoid, not that it wasn't for a good reason. The Egyptians liked making fake dead ends to trick robbers into thinking nothing was left in the room. The same "dead ends" were even made to look like they were already looted to discourage the grave robbers from looking any closer. If they did look around any closer, the grave robbers might find a wall plastered over and painted to look like the rest of the room.

Said wall was rather easy to find. After a few thousand years, it wasn't in anywhere near the same condition as the stone that surrounded it. Although it's been sitting undisturbed all that time, the paint no longer matched the stone surrounding it, and parts of it were already flaking away. It only took a moment to tear the wall down, and after doing so I saw what was behind it and sighed. Of course.

The passageway was blocked off with several tons of stone blocks, the same stone that was used to build the pyramid to begin with.

Yeah, this is also a thing that they occasionally did to deter thieves. After finding the fake wall, thieves would occasionally find the passageway blocked by several tons stone. That's right, after the King's Chamber was finished, it was completely blocked off to prevent any entry.

I could dig though it… In fact unless I want to return to the Warmaster empty-handed I have to dig through it, but it's going to burn through a grief seed. Maybe several more if the passage turns suddenly and I don't notice.

Well, at least Nero is going to make sure I get all of the grief seeds I need if I can bring anything she likes back. She loves her ancient trinkets.

>> ☐ Nubum 10/17/14(Fri)14:46:00 No.35587249

Well that luckily only took two grief seeds. The passage didn't turn… just had a shitload of stone to dig through. Which was more than a little annoying when I kept wondering if the passageway turned and I didn't notice.

Ah well, at least I'm here now, and the Warmaster is going to be thrilled when she sees this. I mean, there was a lot more uncovered from Tutankhamun's tomb in the 20s, but this is still more than I've ever seen. I see several dozen golden statues of warriors, animals, and Gods ranging from a few inches to a foot and a half in height, several gems, and if I'm not mistaken, a few magical weapons. There's also a few scrolls and tablets for me to read through later.

Right, I should probably go over what happens to the treasure that I find. The Warmaster gets first pick out of anything I find, which means all the magical weapons either belonging to or enchanted by ancient magical girls end up hers, along with most, if not all of the art, gold, and jewelry that I find. I get paid for whatever the Warmaster takes from what I gather on top of what my normal salary is. Granted, I'm not quite paid anywhere near the value of the artifacts, but it's better than nothing, and much better for my health than trying to sell anything Nero wants on the black market.

Anything left over is mine to do what I want with, either to sell on the black market, give to fellow researchers to go over, or do anything else really. Most of the larger things, like the sarcophagus and the canopic shrine, I leave alone, because there's no possible way for those to fit in my inventory. The Warmaster grudgingly accepts that, on the condition that I at least look through them for anything small enough to carry.

I don't tell her that I don't look too closely when I do check them. I don't mind digging through dirt, stone, and what have you to get into the tomb, but I draw the line at sticking my hands in the remains of a dead guy. That grosses me the fuck out.

>> ☐ Nubum 10/17/14(Fri)14:47:13 No.35587267

>>35587249
You can probably see why I'm here and not on the front line murdering people and bathing in their blood like an Eversor.

Anyway, the treasure. I stuff everything I can carry into my inventory. Most of the statues look golden, but are actually wood that's been gilded. That doesn't take away from their value though, they're ancient statues belonging to an ancient civilization. They have a better value to weight ratio for researchers, thieves, and generally anyone without a magical inventory capable of holding everything nearly weightlessly. Lucky me, I'm spared the trouble of having to pick and choose what to take and get to nab everything in one trip.

After looting the rest of the room, I turn towards the canopic shrine. The shrine itself is about seven feet tall and made out of mostly gilded wood with a few statues around it. I spend a moment using my magic to make stairs out of the stone under my feet and climb up to pry the top off. Once that's done, I look inside—

Well. That's odd.

It's empty.

I don't mean "Oh, there's nothing Nero wants inside, no gold or jewelry" empty. I mean "there's nothing fucking there" empty. No canopic chest, no canopic jars, not even the dust of ancient organs on the ground. I'm the first one that's been in this room for thousands of years, so it's not like someone made off with it and left all the gold behind.

So why go through the trouble of building a Canopic Shrine if you're not going to put anything inside?

Curious, I turn to the sarcophagus. I walk up to it and start working on prying the lid off. It only takes me a few moments to take it off, thank god I'm not a Vindicare or I'd have to blow it off if I wanted any hope of seeing what's inside. I look inside and—

Well.

That's… new.

I wasn't expecting to find a magical girl sleeping inside.

What the absolute fuck?

MAGICAL GIRL NOIR QUEST
THE FALL OF CHIAKI MATSUDA

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 10/19/14(Sun)10:13:06 No.35625963 Archived

Hnh. Well, before you decide to go with this kill-team thing your Culexus is suggesting, you want to know more about what she saw during Lucius' interrogation first.

+ Of course, Warmaster. I'll try to provide as much information as I can--+ It's here that a sharp stab of pain pulses across the link between you and Culexus - one that you wince from at the same time that Yuma turns away, one gloved hand reaching up to her throat. +...Ngh, s-sorry about that. I'm...I'm not at a hundred percent yet, but I will be, soon. +

"Take it easy, okay?" Kyoko pats the diminutive Culexus on the back, her brow furrowing in concern. "We'll let ya rest after this. Right, Murderface?"

You nod at your best friend, just as you pull out your journal from your inventory and flip to a fresh page. Of course - Kyoko didn't even need to be ask. You were there when it happened, after all - you know what kind of shit Yuma went through just to get Lucius's secrets out of her skull.

>> ☐ Deculture 10/19/14(Sun)10:15:04 No.35625973

Pen poised over a fresh, virgin page of the slim black journal that you continue to entrust your own memories to, you turn back towards the Culexus. Now, About Oriko's headquarters in the Akashic Realm--

+ I saw Oriko's army, Warmaster. + Yuma's pulse cuts you off. + Sorry, I just gleaned the questions from your surface thoughts. Quicker this way. + Both you and Kyoko share a brief glance, one that Yuma doesn't seem to notice as she continues. + I can't pin down the exact number of the forces she's managed to gather, but a conservative estimate would be fifteen, sixteen full-sized squads in all, inside what looks like a deserted building of some kind. +

"...Sixteen squads?!" Kyoko blurts out, her one eye wide. "That's nearly...! Uh, wait..." The red-haired Eversor mumbles to herself as she looks down at her fingers. "Carry the...hmm, no, wait, that's an imaginary number--"

More than a hundred Magical Girls, then, you cut in, interrupting Kyoko's brow-furrowing mental calculations and at the same time earning yourself a disappointed look from your best friend. You ignore this and look back towards Yuma.

Those sixteen squads, then - that's a conservative estimate, she said?

Yuma nods. + I...do have to note that some of them have already begun to turn in the Akashic Realm, Warmaster. More than a handful aren't Magical Girls anymore, but rather Witches walking around in corpses. I wouldn't be surprised if they turned the moment they transformed. +

Wonderful. You shake your head at this, smiling thinly. This just keeps getting better and better, doesn't it?

Well, about this entire thing being a trap--

>> ☐ Deculture 10/19/14(Sun)10:16:11 No.35625982

>>35625973

+ I can't say for certain if it's a trap or not, Warmaster. + Yuma shakes her own skulled helm. + But what I can say for certain is that the Red BITCH-- + With her emphatic mental spitting of the word, you also feel the briefest kiss of an icy-cool rage emanating from the Culexus. + --knows that I'd set off her little trap, but she doesn't know I survived. +

...And how can she say THAT for certain?

+ I heard her laughing about it. + Despite her features being masked by her skulled helm, you know that the young girl in the leather hardsuit is staring at you with cold eyes of frozen ruby. + Laughing and calling me an idiot for falling for the oldest trick in the book. +

...Alright, then. So, one last question. Yuma said she could teleport five people in and out of the Akashic Realm safely and quickly. What if there were six instead of five?

"Yeah, would six be okay?" Kyoko cuts in. "I mean, we are planning to rescue Oriko, right? So we have to come back with her, along with the entire kill-team!"

It's here, then, that your mind link with the Culexus grows silent and cold, as if Yuma had suddenly withdrawn into herself to consider the question. It comes back into life a moment later as a tingling in the back of your skull, and when she speaks through it, it's with the same hesitation she had before you told her to forcibly tear your prisoner's secrets from her brain.

+ I've...well, I can try, Warmaster. I've never tried it before - unassisted, anyway - but I'll do my best. +

Silence. Awkward and stifling.

Then--

"Good enough for me!" Kyoko cackles, raising a hand to hammer the Culexus' shoulder with a bone-crushing slap - but stops herself just in time and simply smacks you instead, very nearly caving your lower back in with the gunshot-loud impact. It's all you can do to stop yourself from collapsing to the floor and curling up in pain.

I don't think we have anything to offer her, but if there's any chance she can't handle six without further injury, I want to know.

If we have to settle for four, four it will be.

And we need to ask the Triad about the Akashic Realm. I have a feeling that going there in person is likely to be Bad for us, but we can't avoid it.

But we can keep the risks for the others down to managable.

Dammit cat, I Monday now, stop ruining my life.

On topic, I wonder how this little private conversation with Yuma will go. Is it going to be Chiaki getting filled in on just exactly what Yuma did and saw, or is it going to be a drawn out festival of emotion filled with bonding, forgiveness, and multiple bottles of Kong?

Thinking about it. Remember that time we rescued Misaka from the warehouse?

One of the girls what we killed was going on about how "We shouldn't be here!" and "Your where supposed to arrive too late!"
This means that the only thing that break Oriko's future sight ability is our timestop. What Oriko saw at the warehouse with her future sight ability was a version of us that didn't use the timestop.

So obviously using our timestop is the saw to beat Oriko. One way we can do it is to engage timestop while we are fighting Oriko and inject her with some sedatives and then return to our original position and resume time. Hopefully she would be too focused on fighting us to realise that she was falling asleep until it was too late. It would be better if it was a situation where we had to save a companion, so she won't suspect that we did something else under time stop.

My stupid half baked idea anyway.

>I wonder how this little private conversation with Yuma will go. Is it going to be Chiaki getting filled in on just exactly what Yuma did and saw, or is it going to be a drawn out festival of emotion filled with bonding, forgiveness, and multiple bottles of Kong?
neither. We've got nothing we can offer her that she wants.

Just need to know the reason for her hesitation, because we're not voluntarily putting her already weakened self through that again.

Poor Yuma has been harshly used, but... I think we're about even, and I don't think she wants Chiaki's sympathy, and realistically we can't even really offer her a boon. The Offico can't afford to lose it's only Culexus on a wild goose chase in the Akashic realm.

We kind of HAVE to go in but alone we're a sitting duck, so we'll have to pick someone to take. But we'll have to pick with care, because there's a very real chance that anyone going into the Akashic realm isn't coming back.

Blueberry is probably a shoe-in, especially given the whole witch gem thing we found, plus she's damn night unstoppable... but she's also a predictable choice.

Interesting idea. I can see two potential problems though.
1. Would a sedative work on a meguca?
2. Using timestop (which is obviously somekind of dimension shifting thing) inside the Akashic Realms could potentially be a very bad idea. Still, hopefully the three stooges might know. Assuming we ever get a chance to talk to them.

Whoever we choose, there are a few considerations.

First, as much as I would love to have Kharn with us, we should stick to people who are here at the moment. Our enemy can see into the future - we do not want to take additional actions that they can interfere with.

Second, we should leave someone capable behind, in-case we die. Think carefully about who you trust to run the Officio if we don't come back. Sayaka or Kyoko would be the obvious choices, but I don't imagine we can take one without the other.

You gingerly massage the spot where Kyoko had affectionately tried to Bane your ass with an open-palmed slap - and it takes you a few moments of silently hating the red-haired Eversor to death before you ask her to round up your retinue at the Incubator's Office. There's planning to be done, and you want them all there when you take what you've learned to Kyuubey himself.

"HUh? Oh...oh, yeah! Sure! I can do that!" Kyoko vigorously nods, finally disengaging from Yuma (but not after giving the Culexus another playful noogie through her helmet). "Er...what about you, though, Murderface? Aren't ya gonna be there? I mean, we should just go an' fetch them together, since you'll be there and everything--"

You stare sullenly at Kyoko for a few seconds before shaking your head. ...Yes, of course you'll be in the meeting, you'll be the one to lead it, after all. But you're asking her to do it on her own, because you need to ask Yuma a couple of questions first. You'll just catch up with everyone at the Incubator's office in a little while.

"Oh, don't worry, I can wait!" Your best friend grins again, almost glowing in her frank and open innocence. ...Jesus, if Kyoko wasn't your best friend at all, she'd be setting off all sorts of alarms in your head - the sort that would have you take an automatic rifle in your shower while you washed up and wolfed down breakfast, all at the same time.

You open your mouth to try and reason with the red-haired Eversor - to appeal to her common sense - when Yuma politely drives the point home for you. + I think Warmaster Matsuda just wants to ask me a couple of really boring questions, Miss Kyoko. Something about... + She inclines her skulled helmet towards you in genuine puzzlement. + Uh, what? Bringing guns into personal showers? +

"Oh! Hah, I didn't know that was still a problem! Okay then!" Kyoko cackles, before turning towards you and ripping off a perfect salute. "I'll get everyone rounded up as quick as I can! See you at Kyuubey's office, Murderface!"

And with that, your best friend leaves, taking off like a shot, smartphone already in hand and held up to her ear. Her rapidly-receding footsteps barely masking Sayaka's voice shrieking from the tiny speaker of her mobile device.

Silence, once again, as the doors swing shut, leaving the both of you alone in the deactivated Silent Room.

+ Miss Kyoko really likes you. + Yuma pulses after what seemed like an eternity. + I...I have to admit I'm jealous. Even Miss Sayaka feels the same way. +

You can't help but smile at that, despite everything. Yeah, even if she can be a pain in the ass sometimes, you don't call Kyoko your best friend for nothing.

...Wait, Sayaka's jealous too? Of you AND Kyoko?

+ You won't get her to admit it even if you threatened her at gunpoint, but yes. + Yuma looks back at the doors where Kyoko had exited the room from. + Not that she sees you as a threat to her relationship with Miss Kyoko, just that the both of you seem to get along really well. Like...like a house on fire, I remember her saying. +

Ah. Well. You'll agree to that.

Silence, again. The uneasily-heavy silence of two people waiting for the other to talk.

What do you do?

[]Absolve her of guilt. "Whatever it is you did, I don't even remember it. Just focus on what you have to do."
[]Ask her about what she actually did to you, and what she learned from it.

I think Arhiman Round One was only fifty Meguca, which Arhiman itentionally let us kill most of them, and we had Malal and Kharn, and a Timestop that wasn't as hindered as ours is now.

This time around, we don't have those advantages, plus Arhiman is probably going to have a better idea of what we're capable of and less of a desire to play around. We also still don't know how the red Culexus froze and then roasted a bunch of magical girls in that church.

While questions about the upcoming mission may be pertinent, the whole guilt problem is going to stick around long-term unless we deal with it now. Like it or not, Yuma is a valuable resource, and we can't afford to compromise her future competency and add to the potential of her witching out.

We should take both Wendy and Midori with us, along with some sort of beacon Yuma can home in on to teleport help to us. The Callidi come because we trust them, they'd probably witch out if something happened to us while we weren't there, and they'd give us the best chance of not having to butcher our way through an Officio's worth of magical girls to reach Oriko. Once we get to Oriko, we have Yuma teleport in an Eversor who isn't either Kyoko or Sayaka if Oriko can be saved, or both Kyoko and Sayaka if she can't.

Either way, once we're done we'll want to drop a nuke on the Hell Fortress. That many magical girls witching out in the same time and place is too much of a Walpurgisnacht risk not to deal with.

The same thing as with Kharn and Malal back with Girl A.

We should go alone, armed with all the golden Weapons, pretending that we want to reason with her and came alone as a sign of goodwill, and use Timestop when we can to get the Staff out of her hands.

Just as you open your mouth to speak - to break the silence draped upon both of you like a thick, choking blanket - it's here that Yuma raises a gloved hand, again.

+ I know, Warmaster. You don't have to ask it. I-- +

You frown at her here, crossing your arms over your chest. Alright, fine, it was cool the first couple of times, but this pre-empting thing is getting on your nerves. Isn't there some sort of rule that says something about not reading people's minds without their permission, or something? At least, the minds of the people you're actually on the same team with? Because it's just rustling your jimmies something fierce, now. Ninth Officio Culexus or no, you don't like anyone screwing around in your head.

The second sound that Yuma makes in this entire conversation is a gargling, rasping noise at the back of her throat - sounding suspiciously like a vox-corrupted chuckle. + There is, actually. Miss Malal penned it herself. But I didn't even need to read your mind then, Warmaster. I knew what you were going to ask even before I ended up...like this. + She taps at her leather-encased throat. +...Thank you, by the way. For letting me have the luxury of telling Miss Kyoko about my voice. I'll...tell her when I'm ready, of course. +

You nod. She'd better.

Now, about what she did. And what she learned. You want to know--

+...Everything, yes, I'm aware. + She glances towards the doors where Kyoko left the room, before beckoning you closer with a gloved hand. You do so after a moment's hesitation, moving to the side of her makeshift bed and sitting on the edge. + This would be much faster and easier if I just show you, Warmaster. This way, you see everything, as I remember it. +

Show? What, she's got a recording of everything or something? You can have someone fetch Remov from your office if that's what she needs--

+ No, we don't need Remov for this. I'm just... + Another silence borne of hesitation. + I'm just going to psychically send you a copy of my memory of the entire incident. Of what I did. +

Ah. Well...if it's quicker and easier, sure. You blink here as a chill suddenly crawls its way up your spine, as if your body is inwardly recoiling at the mere concept of it. You shake your head a moment later, rolling your shoulders. Maybe you're...just tired. Yeah. Maybe.

Anyway, what do you need to do? Do you need to be in a trance, or something?

Another mechanical-sounding noise, issuing from a permanently-ruined throat. + No, Warmaster. I just need to hold your hand. I can do it remotely, of course, but my injuries aren't helping me focus enough for that. So physical contact will have to do. +

Right. Well. Sure, then.

You hold out your hand, and Yuma takes it with her gloved own. Her touch is...well, it's reassuringly warm, even through the studded leather. Soft.

+ Please relax, Warmaster. You'll need it. +

You're trying. It's...somehow, you're nervous about the entire thing, even if you're not sure what exactly is going to happen.

+ Everyone gets that. + Yuma's voice is unusually comforting. + Now, please your close eyes, and I'll start. +

You obey, closing your eyes behind your glasses, and then--

--You reopen them again, gasping for air, gasping for breath that just wouldn't come. Tears, prickly and hot, trickles down your cheeks in an unwarranted flood. The taste of rotting flesh thick on your tongue, twisting your stomach, threatening to make you sick all over the pristine Silent Room floor. The metallic, coppery scent of an entire lake of blood filling your nostrils.

Yuma was right. It was quicker.

You're not so sure about easier, though.

In one instant, you knew just what she did. All of it. But more than that, you also knew how she felt. All the sensations, the sights, the sounds - the nightmares.

How she decided, upon her outrage at hearing of Malal wiping your memory, to violently take what you saw happen to Kharn that one night. That one night that you don't even remember - a night of blood and betrayal and treachery, with you stumbling into an ambush that Kharn almost died trying to murder you out of.

It should've ended there, but whether it was intentional or not, Yuma ended up sharing more than she promised. You saw brief snatches of what Walpurgisnacht was. What Kharn had become then. What Yuma - and her best friend, Cavefish - nearly died trying to protect themselves from. What the Black Templars sacrificed themselves trying to save the world from.

And more importantly, you saw Malal, her regrets fading on her lips as her corpse disintegrated into nothing.

It's when you manage to pull away from her grasp that you manage to pull breath back into your lungs - and the first breath feels like breathing fire and hate, making you cough and sputter. The tears that you'd been crying without knowing stinging like acid, and you hastily scrub them away with the sleeve of your costume, cursing and hissing underneath your breath.

From a personal perspective? No.

From the perspective of the Officio? Yes.

And since IC we have to go into this assuming that there's a high chance we and everyone else on this mission will die, we want to be sure that we don't fuck up the Officio too badly if things go pear-shaped.

Which is part of why we're leaving Sayaka behind unless absolutely necessary; as Equerry, she's the logical one to at least temporarily assume command of the Officio should we snuff it.

I figure Chiaki would understand making stupid fuckups. Especially in times of stress. If Chiaki/Homura deserves a 2nd chance after all the craziness that she has done, then I figure Yuma does too.

Especially since thanks to all this telepathy, Chiaki KNOWS that Yuma regrets it horribly and feels massive amounts of shame and guilt over it.

I figure its best to just let it go. Its done and can't be undone. Time to move on and fix what can still be fixed.

Midori has already been on a suicide mission for us. She dealt with Pinky, personally, up close, and didn't die horribly.

Wendy's dream-worlds actually give us an advantage in the Akashic Realm because they're theoretically similar in nature - twisted, byzantine strangeness.

Not taking them both would be foolish. Kyoko and Sayaka, Wendy, Midori, andus - Oriko on the way out. and then Chiaki armed with Yuu, the Golden Deagle, and Kirkatana.

I think it would be safe to say we could actually win that fight.

How many imoutos are we going to get?

>timestop in Akashic Realm
If using the Timestop in the 'normal' world pulls a bit of the Akashic Real mover (or shifts us into the Akashic Realm), would using Timestop in the Akashic Real do the opposite, and pull in a bit of the real world?

Damn, some time to experiment before teleporting straight into Oriko's base would have been nice.

Then add:

[x]I cannot forgive you. Not because I don't want to but because I am not in a position to do so. The person you did that to doesn't exist anymore. She is as foreign and strange to you as she is to me. There is no one to ask forgiveness for. I do understand your reasons for it though.
If it is any consolation to you, I would have probably done the same in your place.

You're still shaken from the memories that Yuma shared with you, in that brief, gut-wrenching moment of almost sickening honesty. And if you'll be honest with yourself, part of you feels...angry. Not the same kind of raving, berserker rage that Murderface had been raging with earlier, but an equally-dangerous one that indignantly justified you pulling out your Desert Eagle and emptying the magazine into the Culexus' helmet.

A righteous fury, of discovering the grievous wrong that had been done unto you, and how violence can only redress it. How only someone dying by your hands would be enough to pay that debt.

But as quick as that anger flares up inside you, it's with the same speed that it grows cold. Cold with the realization that Yuma, already cursed in her existence as a Culexus, also had to carry this burden, this weight, the entire time. The weight of her sin, and the weight of those who died because of it. Her Black Templar comrades. Her friends. Malal. Cavefish, whom you briefly sensed as someone you probably would have enjoyed having a drink with.

Their ghosts - including yours - pulling Yuma down into the murky depths of her own grief and despair.

In a way - in a sick, sad, and laughably pathetic way - the both of you can be considered similar. The difference is that you don't remember quite enough for the ghosts of your past to haunt you - all except for a pink-haired, shark-toothed one.

It's also here that you realize that Yuma had tried to atone - in a way that only someone as fucked up as you would consider logical. With the guilt eating away at her, she'd deliberately began to detach from everyone, with the exception of a Third Officio traitor. She didn't want to be missed, not by you, not by Sayaka, not by Kyoko - when she finally died. Forgotten, buried in the Hall of Anamnesis' archives. A fitting death for such a hateful, blasphemous sin.

You let out a sigh, and look towards the crying Culexus again. Her padded shoulders quivering with every ragged, burbling grunt. ...Christ, by the way she's sobbing, the inside of her visor must be fogged up something fierce.

You reach out with a hand towards her leering skull of a helmet, and then, carefully, gently - pat her on her shoulder.

"You're forgiven," You hear yourself say quietly. "What you did was fucked, and you know that."

It takes Yuma a moment to stop her horrific crying. + Wha...what? But...Warmaster, I'm horrible, I-- +

"I didn't say you weren't." You cut her off, making her flinch. "But you know what you did, and I know how much you've suffered since then. I felt it, anyway." Shaking your head, you pat her on top of her helmet this time. Like you would a little sister. "I can at least understand why you did it, too."

More silence. More painful, choking noise. + Warmaster...Matsuda... + Even her pulsing voice, normally composed to polite perfection, is on the verge of breaking down into tearful sobs. You shake your head again, and stand up from her bed before she could.

"Rest up. We have the Prophet to take care of." You snap at her, forcing a professional calm back into your voice. The...'Warmaster' voice, as Vintage had put it. "I want you ready once I've assembled the Kill-Team, alright? I want you focused."

Silence, and then a pulsed emotion - one of meek, humble gratitude, and a renewed resolve replacing the rotting, guilt-ridden carcass of regret that had been propped up for display for almost an eternity.

+ Un...Understood, Warmaster Matsuda. I live to serve. +

How do you react?

You leave Yuma's recovery room without another word. That should be enough - you don't trust yourself to say anything else, anyway. And at the same moment, you finish off the sentence you'd left hanging on your journal's now note-filled page.

"Updated my journal," You grumble to no one in particular, before shoving your journal back into your inventory and heading off towards the direction of the Incubator's office.

On the way out, you bump into Touno Asai, the Apothecary Primus that was instrumental into bringing Yuma back alive and in one slightly-charred piece - and you make her blush by thanking her for her work. She demurely accepts your gratitude, assuring you that it wasn't just her, but rather the entire Venenum rank, that brought Yuma back from the precipice. You tell her to convey your thanks to the rank, then, and leave her while she salutes.

+ Nicely done. + Dildoes' smooth, icy voice somehow soothes the throbbing beginnings of a migraine that thumped against the back of your eyes. + You gain the whereabouts of the next person we need to kill, and rescue a valuable member of your retinue from one source of endless distraction. +

An audible, palpable hair-flip. + See? This is what happens when you listen to years of experience and ironclad common sense, Nameless One. Listen to me, and one day you may actually get on my level. +

+I...I don't know...+ Braids' hesitant tone sounds like she's in pain, still, but not like before. They must still be shrugging off the effects of...whatever Pinky did, back during your inauguration party. + I, um, I did like how she was really sorry for what she did to us, though...Y-Yuma-san, I mean. She seems like a nice person, just that she was forced to do something really silly--+

+ HRMPH. + The bladed grunt is loud enough - and painful enough - that it forces you to slow down on your stride. Its sender curiously - but, you guess - understandably irate, her mood as black as the jagged rusting armor bolted to her form and welded to her flesh. + YOU. FORGIVE. A. SNAKE, NAMELESS. DILDO. + Her voice is harsh, but there's an almost childishly-petulant tone to it. Like she's sulking. + IT'LL. BITE. YOU. IN THE ASS. IN THE END. +

Hnh. Well. The gang's all here, at least. This means you don't have to go into that room to ask them some questions, too. You can just do it while making your way to Kyuubey's Office.

So, what do you want to ask?

[]Ask them how they're doing.
[]Ask if they saw Yuma's memories, and what they thought of it.
[]"...Nameless Dildo?"
[]Ask them about the Akashic Realm, and who they think should join you in the Kill-Team.
[]Other.

We are not the only oficio who has had it with Prophet's shit. Tenth and Seventh at least should also be out for blood. Offering them participation in this would build better relationships AND fill the slots with more high-profile players.

They helped create this timetime. They must know something about the Akashic Realm.

Still makes sense that it's the dumping ground of failed timelines.

Madoka's witch.

Remember that madoka used to live normally in this altered timeline, however she always kept finding out what happened to her and Homura kept resetting the timeline so madoka could forget and they could start again.

I shall speak the loathsome word.

We trust the other Officio's judgement.

If we have the means to teleport a larger group, then huzzah, if we don't, I'll feel better sacrificing someone from another office. It would also, if things go to shit, leave our Officio in better strength if we're not gutting the top for a suicide mission.

If Pete's teleport beacon works, we could bring him along, then just shove Oriko straight into him and have someone back at the Officio (or preferably in some nice deserted area we can fortify) use the beacon to pull him back. Once Oriko is extracted, the remaining team only need to mop up long enough for Yuma to bring them back out.

In a bar half a notch below classy on an evening half a notch above dreary, a red-haired woman dressed in bright, offensive yellow waved toward the door. There wasn't really any danger of her companion MISSING her – nobody missed her, when she wanted to be seen – but the kind little gestures of normalcy still existed even between people like them.

"You changed your outfit." This kind of greeting was as good as any, Vintage decided. It wasn't like they'd gotten a chance to talk in…a while. Quite a while. "The Eleventh Yatagarasu?" she added, sliding into the booth. The redhead shifted smoothly into a pout.

"I don't spend my ENTIRE life pretending to be other people."

Vintage quirked an eyebrow.

"I don't spend my entire life pretending to be previous Spymasters."

Higher, she decided. She could quirk it just a little higher. Reginald's head tilted coolly to the side. The redhead – colloquially the Spymaster, ceremonially the Fourteenth Yatagarasu, often Yuri Satou, and to her closest friends, a pain in the ass – slumped into her seat.

When it became abundantly clear that pouting wasn't going to get her anywhere, however, she snapped back up into a smile.

"So how was she?" The Spymaster chirped, leaning in.

"Your suggestions were…helpful. She really holds a crowd like nobody I've ever seen. Well, outside of a few bloody battles, back in the day." Ah, whiskey. When you get it straight, you don't even have to wait for your drink. Vintage gestured to the bartender to leave the bottle. "I missed the beatboxing, though. Damn shame."

"I…No, no, Shijou's great, but that's not…" Her friend's shit-eating smirk informed the Spymaster that she was well-aware that it wasn't. She sipped at her own minty aberration of a beverage. Vin hadn't changed much, she decided. "I MEAN the new Warmaster."

"Matsuda, hm…" She sipped at her whiskey, then after some deliberation, dribbled a little bit from her personal flask into the glass. Reginald fluttered down from her head to perch on the bottle, and as she rose her glass again, she paused long enough to let him snap up a tiny beakful.

"She's screwed," the former Warmaster decided, and left a small pause to let it sink in. "Or worse, she isn't, and she'll end up like us." Vintage's laugh was sharp and bitter, and she downed a shameless mouthful of amber salvation. "Doesn't even enjoy it, you know, she's wound up tighter than…well, you. And that's before the paperwork! But I'm sure Mami will keep her going long enough to do what she needs to do. Or at least, long enough to find someone better for it."

"Aw, that's mean. I kind of got this troubled loner vibe from her, myself. Like, she wants to enjoy it, but she doesn't want to give in to the MONSTER WITHIN." The Spymaster sighed, tracing the rim of her drink with a manicured finger. "I just want to hug her and tell her it's okay to let go a little bit."

"Is that before or after you crush her under your silken heel, or however it is you put it nowadays?"

"Presentation is an important part of a high-class meal. You can't just dig into it like an animal, you have to savor it with all of your senses."

A pause, then a grin split her face.

"She'll probably hate me, for a while. That's kinda fun, too."

It was a few drinks in when Vintage got to her point – or, perhaps, when the Spymaster got to hers.

"So have you reconsidered yet?" it was a quiet, earnest question, one that cut through the relaxed, almost jovial tone of the conversation like a pop-culture katana. The Spymaster's smile faded, her form flickered, insubstantial and impossible to look at before settling elsewhere – a tall, buxom figure with silver hair, hunched over the booth as if weighed down by years at the top. She still smiled an awkward and forced smile, as she took a reflexive glance around. Nobody was looking.

Nobody here would look, nobody here would know, or even remember differently, aside from the two of them. She could hardly call herself the best in the business if she couldn't manage that much.

"…You know I'd like to, Vin. Things got complicated down here recently – I'm sure you know about that – and I'm not…" She scratched at the back of her neck, looking at anything but her friend. "There's nobody to take over.

Nobody I trust enough.”

“…I’m sure the Thirteenth would. Satou was-“ “Completely insane? Yeah, no thanks.” She downed the rest of her drink and ordered a beer instead. “I’ve got a few people in mind, but they’ve all got problems I’d need to iron out. I don’t think I can do that anytime soon. Two of them aren’t even contracted, and one of those isn’t even a prospective, just…a hunch, I guess. I think she’ll do well, but she needs training from the ground up.”

“Ugh, the moment something pisses her off the war paint will go on and the whole Yatagarasu legacy’ll go down the toilet. Two’s great, but she’s not really…like…you know? And that leaves Prime and your little sister. And your sister’s…well, she doesn’t lay around in her room all day snacking anymore, right? But there are a lot of complications.”

“I’ll ignore the shot at my family for now.” The former Warmaster smiled a little, and the Spymaster smiled in turn. It seemed to lift the mood a bit.

“And she hates you, doesn’t she?”

“She doesn’t HATE me.” The Spymaster paused, poking at her beer bottle with a fingertip. “…Do you think she hates me?”

“Without a doubt.” Vintage shrugged, taking a deep draught of whiskey. She froze halfway through as a small noise escaped her companion’s throat, then reached across to pat her shoulder. “Not everyone can like you. Not even when you’re perfect. Arguably, perfection is repulsive for people raised in an imperfect society. On top of being entirely subjective to begin with.”

“Thanks. You sure tried.” A little smile from the Spymaster lit up the booth again. Just a little bit. A few minutes passed between them, but each had slowed down, for the most part, to nursing their drinks.

“…It’s ungodly boring up there. It makes me want to choke someone.” Vintage broke the silence, and the Spymaster snorted. “No, really. It’s like Warmaster duties but with none of the interesting bits, all the time. Are you SURE you haven’t reconsidered? We could raise Hell up there. It would be just like Bogota.”

“Sure, Bogota was FUN, but Satou never let me forget it. …Geez, I was still pretty green back then…”

“You’ll always be green to me.” The near-predatory grin was enough to make the Spymaster laugh, with a snort at the end that made her stop and cover her nose.

“Oh, Shempai~”

Another few minutes passed as things edged toward awkward again. This time, it was the former-redhead that spoke first.

“…It’s really bothering you, isn’t it? Being stuck up there?” Vintage’s eyes met hers, and she glanced down to Reginald, as if to check something with him.

“I don’t hate it. Quite the opposite, I’m proud to be there. But it isn’t without its downsides.” She lifted the whiskey bottle again, then let it drop back on the table.

“…It isn’t Varrigan, you know. The procedure’s been developed. Refined. It won’t turn you into a monster.” She paused, then shook her head. “Not you in particular, anyway.”

“Do you think I’m afraid of turning into a monster? I spent like half of my childhood wanting to be a giant spider-“

“I do. You are.” She shut down all protest, and their eyes met again. The Spymaster was exposed to a cold certainty in Vintage’s tone that jabbed her at her core. “…I know you’re trying to work the angles, here. I know you hate being uncertain more than anything else in the world. But we have our secrets to keep, and I’ve given you more than I can afford to in trying to put your mind at ease. I need something definitive.”

Vintage pushed herself to her feet, finishing off her drink shortly thereafter.

I’ve got handlers on the mundies testing their capabilities, and Two and Three might be able to function together well enough to make up for Two’s…thing. Mmkay? I’ve got your back, darling.” The Spymaster winked, a tiny, glowing star bouncing out from the edge of her eye.

“Sooo….” Awkwardly, she slid out of the booth, and joined Vintage on a march to the door. “You staying earthside for the night?”

“I could be convinced.” Some of the ice in the Maerorus’s tone melted away, and the Callidus eased her arm around her waist.

“We could play truth or dare. Or practice kissing.”

In a hotel room half a notch below classy, the woman colloquially known as the Spymaster woke up alone. Well, alone save for a small, fat, red-eyed crow with a letter clutched in its beak. On the front was a name, one many people had spoken since she became the Fourteenth Yatagarasu, but one only a handful could give any real meaning.

-For the time being, I’ve decided to leave Reginald in your care. Think of him as your own personal Yatagarasu – take him with you as much as you can, and you’ll always have my eyes on you.

-Vin-

She wasn’t sure whether it was romantic or threatening. Maybe that was the fun of it.

Trials of the Thrice-Cursed

Ch.0-1: Alone

I used to work for the Ninth. That was a lifetime ago, or at least it feels like it was. Eversor I was, a pretty damn efficient one if you'll allow my bias. It was a pretty nostalgic time actually; I even managed to make a couple friends. Someone as reclusive and twisted as I was? Go figure how that happened. Well, I'm still reclusive and twisted, but for different reasons now...

It all came down to Planet Hell on my last mission with them. On paper it looked pretty good; a solo hunt in a high-level barrier with no friendly fire or rescues to worry about. It was a pretty strong one too - forgot which class, though, I was never any good with that scale thing - so I got pretty excited of course. Sure, it's natural for all Eversors, but for me there's something more to it. Some kind of deeper connection if you will.

Everything went just fine at first. I got to the target area without any problem, no by-standers, no rivals, no ambushes, just me and the target. I smelled something weird when I first entered the Barrier, but I quickly shrugged it off as just some random whim of the Barriers' like so many others.

I was wrong. So goddamn wrong...

It was a good fight I won't lie, a fun one I'd fight again another day, but when the Witch started to lose the Barrier started to distort. I didn't really pay attention to it at first - again, fucking stupid arrogant me... - after all Barriers shatter when Witches die right? So it didn't seem too out of place. Early? Sure, but not entirely unbelievable. As the encounter went on the Barrier continued to go to shit, distortions and rips into reality forming all around, enveloping everything. No seriously how the fuck didn't I realize this earlier? How stupid can I get when I'm engrossed in combat!? I should have recognized those distortions from the start.

They were made from the same kind of energy my magic uses.

I want to apologize to Braids, and ask a lot of questions (lots of them have come up since our last talk).

Before long everything started to break down the normal way, but it didn't shatter back to the normal world like it usually does. No, the Rifts just grew and before I could do anything about it there was no escape anymore. Everywhere around me was this warped energy I knew too well, always shifting in colors, angles and lights, flowing like currents with no regard to physics or logic. It would have been reassuring to me, normally. Except I didn't -ask- for it to show up this time.

When I came to, I seemed to be in roughly the same spot as I was supposed to be if the hunt had ended normally, but I could feel something was wrong, horribly wrong. The first thing I noticed was that Warbringer, my chainaxe, was no longer by my side and I wasn't able to summon it back to my location no matter how I tried.

Then Planet Hell happened for real.

Before I could re-assess my situation, I took a bullet to the chest and staggered. Large caliber, downwards angle, nasty business. Vindicare for sure, probably a green squad dispatched on the fly because they were the closest. Why? Because they didn't go for the head or Soulgem. Well, I suppose a gaping hole where the heart is supposed to be would have stopped your average rank-and-file, but I'm an Eversor. More importantly, one that specializes in being -really fucking annoying to kill-. Two more shots followed after a few fractions of instants but I was able to stop them with one of my armored hands. The rounds punched deep into the black metal painfully, but with worse damage avoided.

I didn't stick around for long after this; I didn't know how many, where or why. This is the kind of challenge I'd normally love, but without Warbringer with me I just felt so vulnerable, kinda naked, so I ran. I ran like the wind while my regeneration kicked in. Several more bullets were fired, some piercing flesh and detonating, others missing their marks, grazing long ebon hair or being deflected.

By the time I finally got some quiet, I think I could count 3 whole squad's worth of guns, judging from the number of different angles and the variety in calibers. Shockingly didn't kill a single of these fuckers on my way out, lucky them... not so lucky -me- however.

I had managed to find some cover in a deserted underground parking lot, but they were waiting for me - whoever the fuck it was that was gunning for me. I never really interacted with those girls with the weird-ass suits and biker helmets, so I didn't know what to expect when I spotted one in the shadows.

I learned. Fuck did I learn. I wouldn't wish that pain on anyone. Actually I lie, it was a great pain and I'm not that merciful, but you get the point. I almost fell to my knee from her sheer presence. I didn't know how or why, but to keep it simple it felt like being stuck in an active Silent Room. Except you're not, you're totally on free grounds.

I tried to collapse the area between the two of us with one of the sorcerous spells in my arsenal, but nothing came, as if her mere presence prevented me from channeling anything. At this point I pretty much just freaked out and bailed again. I pride myself in being fearless, but when your weapons are suddenly taken away from you and you just feel like a declawed, defanged tiger, you just don't fucking stay there asking to get put down.

I knew not to try to fuck with her, so I didn't. I ran again and thank fuck at least my body was still as fast as it was supposed to be. I had to take some potshots from relocated Vindicares when I got out, but those were healed by the time I found another hole to hide out in. They must have decided not to give chase because it really wasn't that good of a hiding spot, but I'm not complaining.

Now that I was finally able to catch a breath, I took out my cell and tried to link up with the Officio, ask what the fuck was going on. Had they just suddenly decided to retire me like that?

Nah, couldn't be... it wouldn't have been such a sloppy job if they had because they'd have planned it way in advance and they'd know what to expect of me, so what else?

And it's then that I realized just how truly fucked I was.

My cell didn't have any of my contacts in the Ninth anymore, nor did it have the little app I got to receive missions and notices on the go.

I was alone.

Ch.0-2: Alone - part.B

I used to work for the Ninth. That was a lifetime ago, or so the whole goddamn universe aligned to make me feel that way. I was pretty thoroughly confused at first - and I still am but that's beside the point. After losing the ability to use most of my strengths and suddenly being ambushed by an unknown force that may or may not have been my own Officio deciding to retire me, I desperately needed answers. It didn't really matter what, just... anything to get a clue would have been fine at that point.

So what did I do? The most glaringly stupid thing I could possibly try? Well yeah, of course. Because it was the most direct way to be sure if they really decided to retire me.

I may not have been the smartest Magical Girl around, but I at least knew my hunting grounds, so I was able to lay low and get through the city without attracting too much attention. Well, not as efficiently as a Callidus would have, but enough to not get attacked on the way to my destination.

Besides, my target was in a fairly populated area, so with the human traffic it wasn't too hard to hide my... defining features. I slipped my armored hand into one of my kimono's large pockets and produced a keycard from my inventory, hiding the trick in the process.

I wasn't exactly surprised when the security system at the gate refused to take my clearance, but it still made my body tense and my throat choke a bit. Deep down I figured it would happen, but I had refused to accept it, taking another, desperate sweep to no avail. Well, at least it didn't ring some sort of alarm... none I could actually -hear- anyways.

I knew I should have bailed, but I couldn't help but just stand there dumbfounded for a moment. Was this really all happening? It was so sudden. It was so out of nowhere... just, why?
[5/8]

>> ☐ Zweihart 10/19/14(Sun)15:35:26 No.35629627

I gritted my teeth and looked down, staying for a while longer. My cold fingers shook lightly and let go.

When I finally managed to regain my composure, I realized a few of the local Greens were staring at me from outside the lobby. I let out a small sigh to steel myself and straightened my posture. They were staring, sure, but that meant they weren't actually attacking me. So either I was getting this all wrong or the memo didn't get passed down just yet. Either way it meant I didn't have anything to worry about for the time being.

I figured if there's anyone left who might give me the time of day, it'd have to be one of the few good friends I had here. I knew just which to ask for, actually; she's pretty special; she has a really unique ability and a big reputation. There's no way they wouldn't know who--

They didn't. They seemed genuinely clueless when I told them her name. Even when I used that really fucking silly nickname she hates and -everybody- worldwide seemed to know back in the days.

That's just impossible... yeah.. it's impossible.. there's no way.

"Ma... did they... they couldn't have..." I found myself rambling in disbelief. I must have looked pretty creepy because the fresh contractees backed off really fast. Well, I can't really blame them if they stole a good look at these baleful eyes of mine.

At this point I just headed off, still stunned and in shock. I disappeared back into the human mass and slipped away with a slow, dragging pace. Whatever had happened to me didn't happen only to me. One of the two best friends I had allowed into my trusted, personal space was gone too. For a moment I wanted to try to find some relief in the fact that I wasn't alone, but guilt sucker punched me just a few seconds afterwards. Fuck this I don't want her to have to go through any of this shit too...

>> ☐ Zweihart 10/19/14(Sun)15:36:35 No.35629642

Before I knew it, I was on autopilot. My body headed back to where my new home was. I had managed to get a nice place with all the money I made from missions and other odd jobs on the side about a year or so back. I still had a ridiculous amount to pay for it, but I thought I'd be fine if I kept that kind of income steady. The place was pretty comfortable and well located too, a sweet little haven to unwind and relax at.

So what the bloody hell was this construction site doing in its place!? This time I had to stop and lean against one of the nearby lampposts to take it in. What. The fuck. Seriously. What the fuck is going on. It's almost as if...

I flicked my cellphone back open and checked the date more carefully. Yeah.. I may tend to lose track of time, but I'm pretty sure a whole three years difference is a bit of a big deal. I took a heavy, deep breath and slumped against the lamppost. So was that it? Did this mean that weird as shit Witch Barrier sent me back three years? Was I just at the wrong place at the wrong time for that Vindicare shooting gallery?

I took another deep breath and tried to let things sink in. So far... it would have made sense. It would have worked with the twisted logic of this fucked up day. But that was just an assumption, I needed a better way to make su--

I double-checked the date and blinked. This day and month.. this hour.. I recognized it. That was the day of the trainwreck at the sorting station for all the smaller towns around. There was a suicidal train driver who picked up speed way past the limit and he got flung like a boomerang at the turn. If this was supposed to be the past, then it would happen roughly one hour from now, at 9:13.

>> ☐ Zweihart 10/19/14(Sun)15:37:54 No.35629661

I didn't waste any time and headed over to the station, it was 8:22. At that point I started to miss my bike. I used to have a pretty classy Kawasaki sport-touring that worked great in urban. It didn't have any of those fancy-ass mods like the Eight's or the Fourth's would have, but I still liked it. Well, it was gone like the rest, so there was no point in rambling about it too much.

I eventually made it to an elevated area from where the spot the trainwreck was supposed to happen at could be easily seen and plopped down onto the grass with a sigh. It was 9:04 and I hadn't run for this long for a long time.

I stayed there, silent, watching with nothing to say and nothing to really think about. This was my only real lead and if my hunch was right then things would go to shit in just a few minutes.

9:11 : You know. I should probably have felt like an horrible piece of shit for just sitting there waiting for a bunch of innocent bystanders to get crushed into soylent green fodder. I really should have. But at that point, I just felt hollow.

9:13: There it went, that should have been the one. My eyes stayed glued on the lead wagon for a while, dimmed and tired, but after a few seconds I realized it was going at normal speed. It wasn't going to break off the tracks. It took me a few seconds more to actually realize what that meant and that it just took a huge shit on my little pitifully-cobbled theory. I sighed heavily and waited, thinking maybe it had just been delayed a little.

10:25 and still nothing.

'Guess this wasn't the past after all.

I was still just as fucked, though.

Human Resources 3: An Offer He Can't Refuse

We go a while back, Peter and I.

I was fresh out of high school at the time, all full of hope and dre- well, no, I got that out of my system a while back. Wanted to be an actress, at the time; still do, really. Film or theatre, Hollywood or Broadway, I didn't much care. Just not Japan, no future in that kind of thing, here. When's the last time anything worth watching came out of this rock? Even picked up some English for that end. Bit rusty, but enough to talk to the Eighth when I have to, as it turned out a few years later.

Don't give me that voice acting spiel, either. I'm not going to be some faceless sound in a microphone.

I guess it was the idea, on some level. The thought that you get to pretend you're someone else and, for a little while, everyone believes you, connects to someone you just made up, thinks you're whoever you tell them you are. I wasn't too happy with who I was back then for a lot of reasons, so that might have been part of it. Honestly, though, I just always had so much fun with it. ...Not that the fame and stacks of cash hurt any, if I made it big.

Needless to say, I didn't. I didn't make it at all. In fact, I didn't even start. You get a helping hand from on high up until high school, but then you reach university and the floor's swept out from under you. Family couldn't rustle up the money for university, acting school, the sort of connections that get you into the acting world, anything like that. I didn't have the training, the people or whatever else I'm supposed to have. Just how it goes, and my day job at a register sure wasn't going to change that. What can you do, really?

>> ☐ Malal 10/19/14(Sun)15:39:46 No.35629685

Along comes an Incubator, like a carrion bird for dreams. He gave me this big talk about granting a wish, how he could make me everything I wanted to be. Promised me the world. Too bad he laid out way too much, or at least more than he should have. Sometimes I wonder what would've happened if I met Little Coobs – Peter just stares at me when I call the Ninth that – instead of the Third.

He's what you might call one of the traditional, old-fashioned Incubators. Really by the book, didn't have enough of... himself in his head to be clever; all empty inside, like they're supposed to be. Might be a genius in his own way, but he didn't have the first clue about humans. Told me everything, see? Fight witches for a living, maybe die, unless I miraculously last to retirement, or most likely just turn into a witch myself.

Not a bright guy, sometimes.

Knew someone like him, once. Sold watches, and I think maybe some other branded stuff, all 'genuine' if you ask him. Real cheap, too, almost too good to be true. I met him at a better time in my life, so I was having none of it. This little rabbit, though... well, he was one lucky guy, showing up when he did. I had an ear to listen, to see what I could get out of him. It was a tempting offer, somehow, despite all the strings attached. Despite the promise hanging over the door that I'd be coming to die, or worse.

I'd say I know a scam when I see one, but I like to think you don't need to be all that clever to spot this one. Given that he got some contracts even back then, though, I'm not so sure.

We talked for a while, partly since I was hoping I could figure him out. Fat lot of good that did, but I did learn a thing or two about entropy, mostly that Incubators love bringing it up with every other word. At least, the real old school ones do. It's a funny feeling, realising the world's so much bigger than you know. That there's all this stuff going on around you that you never knew about.

I spent a while there, on that rooftop. It was a nice view, with the blinding orange sunset over Mitakihara's skyline. Just me and some half-cutesy, half-disturbing alien sitting next to me, with his ears flapping a bit in the wind. Staring at me with the same wooden expression, the same beady little blue eyes for ages. I still haven't figured out if they can change that at all; physically, I mean. It'd go a long way towards helping them reel in contracts if they didn't look so weird and creepy once you think about it. Still, there we were, a pair of silhouettes in the sunset, while I started to figure out just how little both of us understood.

I didn't take the contract, in the end. Turns out it's an offer I can refuse after all.

He didn't get it at all, I told him. He doesn't get US at all. Not a clue about what he's doing. Funny, huh? Ancient alien or whatever, getting lectured by some girl right out of high school. I like to think it did him good, because like I told him, his schtick was barely good enough to convince the odd desperate teenager. That's when I made him a counteroffer, and he might have looked surprised if he could do that at all. Told me later that it hadn't happened before. Somehow I felt a little proud about that, at the time.

>> ☐ Malal 10/19/14(Sun)15:42:23 No.35629738

I offered to teach him, in a way. To manage things for him. Get him some fresh recruits. Give him a little pointer here and there to help him snare more new blood, or get his Officio running more smoothly. I'd like to pretend I was oh so special, but the truth is that most of it wasn't that hard. The contract details were some of the first things to go. It's all sensitive, dangerous information, the kind that needs to be explained properly and carefully. Slap on some security clearances, and put someone in charge of relaying it properly to the greenhorns.

That means me, obviously. An Incubator can't lie, or so I'm told, but if I happen to twist things a little, to never tell these kids just how they're going to end up, how's he to know? It wasn't his fault. Plausible deniability, one of the older and better tricks in the book, and I handed it to him on a platter. Once in a while, someone blabs a little too much, and one of the girls at the Third finds out. Sometimes we ship her off to another country, other times we have her retired. Once in a while, they witch out just from learning what's going on.

What's in it for me? Well, it's good practice, partly, but the paycheck doesn't hurt any. Little guy can afford to spare me a good bit of money given everything I do for him. Third wasn't exactly doing great for a while, little low on recruits for obvious reasons, but I've propped it up pretty nicely, and the business side of it isn't doing half bad either. Got its hands into supporting a fair number of orphanages and hospitals, too. Makes a good impression and, frankly, a real good hunting ground for new catches.

From there, it's down to me. Perfect older sister of all the Third, looking after each and every one of them. Not to grease the wheels or keep everything running smoothly, of course. Not because having them witch out or snap prematurely would be inefficient. No, it's because I care about each and every one of them, and we're all making it through this together. I could show them the ropes, tell them everything they need to know, because I've been at this for longer than any of them.

Ate it all up, too. I've been just a little bit older than all of them for... oh, a while now. Keeps me on my toes, adjusting my look in one direction or the other over the years so I'd stay just the same. Just what the image calls for. Sure, I don't change any, and that might seem suspicious if any of them lasted more than a couple years. They don't, not so far.

That's about how it's been until now. Main difference is, I got better. Petey did too, little by little, in his own way. Sometimes I think it might be bothering him. End of the day, that's about all there is to me: The woman who threw her wish away, and made her own deal with the devil.

Poor old Mephy, I don't know what he'd do without me.

>> ☐ Malal 10/19/14(Sun)15:44:39 No.35629785

Some might say it's... oh, I don't know. Cruel, selfish, selling out humanity. Human trafficking, if you want to slap a term onto it. I've given the last couple of years to helping an alien take the souls of kids and jam it into rocks so they'll turn into monsters. Some people might hate me for that. Some might lecture me. You know what?

Get off your goddamn high horse before I punt it out from under you. The door's over there.

I didn't get my dream either. Why should they? Whatever the reason, I spend all my recent years looking after a gaggle of psychotic brats, making sure they keep ticking, hearing out all their stupid problems and throwing away my life for it; like I said, as far as anyone from my old life knows, I'm dead. The best company I've got in all this is some kind of living mascot that wouldn't know a human emotion if it hit him in the face, and given that he swallows grief seeds sometimes, I'm not completely convinced that it doesn't literally do just that. You know what, though? I'm the only one in this Officio with anything close to standards. I've never hurt anyone; I carry a gun just in case, but I'm not a killer. I haven't lost my mind like the rest of them. I don't giggle while I carve up monsters. You'd think that would mean something.

Treasure Hunter Elaine

Chapter 2: Back from the Dead

So.

I just found a living magical girl sleeping inside of a sarcophagus that was resting in an untouched ancient Egyptian tomb. Well, it was untouched before I arrived anyway.

The girl in the sarcophagus has tan skin, and her hair goes down to her chin. Her dress… you know, that typical Egyptian dress women wear… I think it's called a kalasiris? Hers is odd. Usually the clothes at the time helped indicate social status, and longer and larger was considered better at the time. Point is, this girl's kalasiris is unusually short for someone well off enough to have their own tomb. Hers only goes down to her thighs instead of her ankles. The dress is also made of silk instead of linen. She has a decorative golden belt resting on her waist, as well as gold bracelets that cover most of her forearm, and several golden gorgerine – the metal discs Egyptians wore as jewelry – on her chest. (I swear I'm not looking up what everything is called on my tablet right now. I can't even get a signal this deep inside the pyramid.)

Allow me to restate my previous assessment of the situation:

What the absolute fuck?

She's definitely not some thousand-year-old magical girl. That's impossible. There is no way she could have survived that long. Her body hasn't decayed at all, so it must be sustained by magic, yet her soul gem is crystal clear. If she had ludicrous amount of magical energy and some sort of stupidly efficient magic focusing on preservation, I'd be generous and give her a week, maybe two at the very most, before there would be some darkness in her soul gem. There's no way she's been here longer than that.

So that brings up the question… How the fuck did she get here? She certainly didn't dig her way through like I did, or phase through the walls, or even teleport in. Not when it took me two grief seeds to get here and she's still grief-free.

Fuuuuuuuck. Does she know how hard it was to get here? The bullshit traps I had to go through? I had to dig my way through several tons of stone to make it here!

And she's just lying there, not a care in the world, sleeping.

Having more than enough questions and not enough answers, I reach down and pick up her soul gem, and bring it up to mine to forcibly wake her up.

The second the gems touch and a spark of magic escapes my soul gem and enters hers, she bolts up looking around.

"Who are you?" She demands the second she lays her eyes on me. "You're not Osiris."

"Osiris? Of course not." I scoff. "Does it look like my head is—"

"Where are the scales? The feather of Ma'at?" she continues, as if I hadn't spoken at all. "My heart is to be weighed upon the scales to see if I am worthy to live for all eternity in the afterlife! How am I meant to live forever if neither Osiris, the scales, nor the feather of Ma'at are here?" The girl takes another look around the king's chamber. "This isn't the Hall of Judgment. Is this my tomb?"

She then turns to face me. "Answer my questions, peasant!"

Alright. Well. I wasn't expecting her to actually say something a pharaoh might conceivably say if they came back from the dead.

I still don't believe that this is her tomb though; too many things don't match up.

"Well for starters, you're not dead." I state. "Not only are you not dead, your body isn't even mummified, let alone—"

"Well of course I'm not mummified!" The girl proclaims. "To enter the afterlife one needs to be mummified after death and have the Death of Osiris inscribed in the tomb, or have the proper spells cast on the body after death! I refused to let anyone defile my perfect body in such a way, so I ordered the high priest to chant spells and have the Death of Osiris in my tomb instead of having them eviscerate me! I refused to be placed in my tomb any other way!"

…She's not wrong.

I mean, she's crazy if she thinks this is her tomb, but she's not wrong about how the Egyptians believed they could enter the afterlife. Those that could not afford to be mummified, which ended up being most of Egypt back then, could have a priest cast the proper spells on their dead body. Back then the Egyptians believed that the proper spells would be enough to transfer the dead over to the afterlife. I mean, they weren't spell spells. The priests weren't using real magic, just some scripture. However for the ones paying the priests for closure, it was enough.

"Wait a moment. You say that I am not one of the dead?" She asks me.

Well, soul gem aside… "Obviously, otherwise I wouldn't be able to sp—"

"Aha!" She interrupts again. Does she ever let people finish sentences? "Osiris must have saw fit to return me to my mortal body to rule once more!" The girl stands up in the sarcophagus. "I, Cleopatra VII Philopator, the reincarnation of Isis herself, shall not disappoint him as I continue my rule!"

My mind grinds to a halt.

Cleopatra? No. Bullshit. No. Cleopatra died about two thousand years ago. She committed suicide about a week after her husband killed himself after losing to Julius Caesar on the battlefield. This insane girl is NOT Cleopatra. I don't care how well she knows her Egyptian history and mythology. I don't care how tempted someone could be to disregard all of the evidence saying that it's impossible that she's been here for at least two thousand years. She is NOT Cleopatra.

I'll admit our knowledge of history isn't perfect. Researchers have been hilariously wrong about things in the past, and I have no doubt we'll continue to make mistakes in the future. But I'm willing to bet all the treasure in my inventory that this girl is not Cleopatra.

Do you want to know why I'm so sure she's not Cleopatra?

Do you want to know why I don't think she could have been here for a hundred years, let alone the two thousand required for her to be Cleopatra?

Hell, do you want to know why I'm beginning to doubt that she's even Egyptian?

She's not speaking ancient Egyptian. This entire conversation is in perfect, modern day English.

She even speaks in an American accent.

Yeah.

I don't think I need to explain anything else as for why I think she's either insane or full of shit.

"Aha!" the fake gets my attention. She apparently replaced the lid to the sarcophagus while I was mentally disputing her claim of being Cleopatra. She's now standing on top of the sarcophagus as if she's the queen of the world or something. "I see that now you know who I am, you are awestruck in my royal presence. Usually I make my subjects bow before me, but I shall let it slide this time peasant. Your look of adoration is enough to satisfy me for now."

You… what? Adoration? What?

The not-Cleopatra jumps down from her sarcophagus. "Come, my loyal subject. The world must have changed since I've been gone. Show me the wonders of this new world and what I need to know for my glorious return!" She then turned and starts walking out of the king's chamber, expecting me to follow.

I stand there for about a minute absolutely dumbfounded. It's only the sound of a soft thump down the passageway that not-Cleopatra went down that I snap out of it. I turn to the sarcophagus after a moment to see if she is as stupid as I think she is. I reopen it and look inside.

…Yep. It's right there on its side. She really did leave her soul gem behind in the sarcophagus.

I reach down and pull out the girl's soul gem. Still perfectly clear.

With a sigh I put her soul gem in my pocket, and debate about what I'm going to do.

I can't just leave her here or… kill her. Pius, our incubator, might want a word with our faux-Cleopatra to find out what she was doing here. I certainly want to know what the hell she's doing here. If she wasn't acting and she really has no idea that she's a magical girl, Pius might even try recruiting her.

However, the idea of waking her up, putting up with her for several hours, and then convincing her to come to Rome and meet with Pius… Yeah, I don't see that working out with her attitude. I mean, if she's sincere I could probably get her most of the way to the 14th, maybe even all the way to Pius, with her "show me the world!" order. However, if she tries to keep up the Cleopatra act by causing a scene everywhere she goes by marveling at the technology, or by trying to start a cult that will worship her, that would be much more trouble than it's worth. I'm a treasure hunter, not a babysitter. And I certainly don't want to watch for a dagger in my back the entire time if she's here for a reason and she decides to drop the act at some point.

It's not like I could just carry her body around either. Besides being creepy as fuck, airport security would have… rather interesting things to say about hauling a dead body around. After all, it's not like I can just carry her dead body around without anyone noticing like I hide the treas—

No. It would make things… much, much easier and cause minimal headaches on my end, but…

I can't believe I'm even thinking of this.

I look around the room for a moment and my eyes rest on the sarcophagus.

…The third, innermost sarcophagus is empty. I could fit that into my inventory…

"I can't believe I'm doing this." I mutter as I walk towards the hall the other girl went down.

I'll be fine. I just have to not think about what's in my inventory for the next several hours and I'll be just fine…

MAGICAL GIRL NOIR QUEST
THE FALL OF CHIAKI MATSUDA

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 10/25/14(Sat)10:27:04 No.35747172 Archived

You blink away the tear-inducing bite of Murderface's bladed thoughts, and knuckle your temple in an attempt to massage away what sting there is left of her jagged, sulking reprimand. Forcing yourself not to snarl at her to cut it out, or to spit back your own brand of hate.

She's suffered enough, you remind yourself. Murderface is you, after all - a future you, with everyone she loved dead by treachery or by her own hands, with brutal claws for fingers. And instead of a peaceful afterlife or even eternal, restful oblivion, she's instead cursed to a blunted existence - an existence where she gets to see herself fuck around and make the same mistakes she did. Mistakes that you're trying your best not to make.

So instead of retaliating, you ask them about what you'd seen, when Yuma shared her memories with you. ...You're still trying to take it all in, yourself - no doubt you'll have nightmares down the line of it, of seeing what Yuma saw when she ransacked your mind for the truth. About your role in...what happened.

Dildoes is the first to respond. + We saw and heard everything, Nameless One, have no fear. Even if one of us was hellishly determined to growl and snarl and roar her way through the entire thing like some beast rutting in the bushes. + You hear the tell-tale 'fwip' sound of someone flipping her hair over her shoulder, followed immediately by a deep, throaty growl. + And yes, we share your sentiment in forgiving the Mindsculptor of what she did. All of us. +

Murderface growls again, this time spicing the sound with speech. + I DON'T-- + She begins, but something cuts her grinding protest short.

+ I said 'all of us', Broken One, and to my regret, that includes you. + Dildoes' voice could have frozen an open fire with just one word. + Need I remind you that we are all HERE because of our godforsaken inability to let go of things that we have no control over? We are trapped in this gilded cage because we were too simple-minded, too achingly obtuse to see beyond our own needs, our own desires! +

It's here, then, that something akin to frustration cracks her coldly-composed voice. + What the Mindsculptor did was reprehensible, deplorable and an affront to the common respect and decency that all sentient minds deserve. But would we have done any different in her place? Have we not done much worse to achieve our own failed ends? +

Silence. An uneasy, uncomfortable silence, enough that even you had to stop in your tracks - and unfortunately making someone bump into you from behind, causing them to fall back. You shake your head at their profuse, squeaking apologies, waving them away as you listened to the fight being waged inside your thoughts.

+ BUT. WHAT. SHE. DID-- + Murderface tries again, the rage still evident in her words, but now diluted somewhat with hesitation.

+--is no longer worth dwelling upon. We are moving on to things that we can actually do something about. + Dildoes cuts the armored fragment off again. + Like the Prophet, for one. And whoever tried to murder us and turned the Betrayer into...what she turned into. +

Yeah. That. A pack of shadows with black-bladed stabbing knives. The vision of them still burned in your mind. Do they know anything about that? Have they encountered anything like it before, in their own timelines?

>>35747178

Silence, before Dildoes speaks again. + Nothing immediately comes to mind, Nameless One. We will try and consult the others, and it will take time, but it seems those murderers are unique to your timeline. + A cold sort of sympathy colors her voice now, and you can't help but wince at its unfamiliarity. + I will say that it smacks of masterful planning, however. Someone knew the Betrayer would abandon all semblance of self-preservation to rescue you, and thus leave herself open to an attack of superior numbers. Someone knew enough of your friendship to use you as bait, and used it to deadly effect. Watch yourself, Nameless One. +

...That doesn't really make you feel better, but sure, you'll take it.

+ Oh? + She sounds amused now. + I wasn't aware we were supposed to be doing that, too. + She chuckles. + Well, take comfort in the fact that we don't necessarily agree that it's our fault that mess happened. Being an unwilling accessory to such a disaster doesn't automatically mean culpability. So try not to dwell too much on that guilt, Nameless One, or else we won't get anything done. +

Hah. Fine. You shake your head as you continue walking. Now, about the Akashic Realm--

+ Bring Kyoko. + It's here that, for the first time, all three of your Desert Eagle's spirits say exactly the same thing, in unison - even Murderface, her psychic voice still bladed, still jagged, but almost matching Dildoes' and Braids' in tone and volume. + You are free to decide on whoever else you bring along to kill Oriko, but bring Kyoko with you. It's important that you do. +

How do you react?

[]Why Kyoko? I'll only bring her along if you can give me a good reason why.
[]Fine. What about the rest? You've got other recommendations, right?
[]What is the Akashic Realm? Is it really a giant barrier or something else?

So do we know what happens to normals in Akashic realm?
We know Megucas get fucked up, but how would a normal last?
I ask because ain't Oriko supposed to be a normal?
What will happen if we take away Ahrimans staff that I presume protects Oriko from the realm they are in?
Should we think of a method to preserve her if we actually intend to save Oriko?

Also if we can't use the teleportation to extract, could we hop in a MiG and fly off to one of the stable points either ath 8th or 2nd and get out that way?

Sorry about the too many fucking questions.

Between megucas, golden weapons, the akashic realm, time fuckery, and anything else I am forgetting/we do not know about, I think it is pretty safe to say that Oriko is most likely not a normal human anymore.

In the original manga that she appears in she is introduced as a magical girl, which grants her her ability to see the future, which then leads to her being an antagonist due to her wanting to prevent Kriemhild Gretchen from destroying everything. Her methods are also rather questionable (kills all megucas she can find just to distract Kyubey from contracting Madoka) and her best friend/bodyguard/right hand is a psychopath who willingly allowed herself to be brainwashed by her.

She could be different in MGNQ of course, but so far everything lines up.

So far MGNQ Oriko has pretty much been doing everything the canon Oriko did or would do though. I would not be surprised if everything she has done so far was of her own will.

I still intend to go through with our Kirika plan I just feel like the potential for it to go very badly is quite high, and the odds are even worse if she is a meguca, which seems likely with the akashic realm being involved.

She will want to come along, though. But I get the feeling that the skills that served her well in the Siberia barrier thingy may not translate real well to what we're going to face in the Akashic Realm. She'll be able to help us sneak around no doubt but there will also be the possibility of a lot of fierce fighting, even if one ignores the inevitable golden weapon fight. I'm thinking that's something that no MG would want to get caught up in.

Anyone else get that feeling like this is that moment at the end of the game where the odds of everyone surviving and living happily ever after are about 2%?

Getting mass effect vibes... and I feel like no choice is a completely good one.

For instance we could take Sayaka and not take Kyouko, but then how do we explain to Kyouko that we left Sayaka to die in order to save Oriko/Mami/Wendy/Midori/etc?

Or if we take both Sayaka and Kyouko what if they get split up forcing us to choose which one dies, causing us to be forever guilty of saving one and not the other while at the same time making one of them guilty as well?

We are going in with five and planning to leave with six. I would be surprised if we still had five after adding Oriko to our party.

Those 2nd, 3rd, and 4th things she did were not combat related and I confess I do not recall how the first went down. Pretty sure we don't intend to go hug/shout at/slap witches and Oriko's kill squad or whatever else is in the Akashic realm.

I am all for Midori doing more things I just don't think this is a good time to. Plus if we took her instead of Wendy and Midori died people would start bitchfits about how it was a conspiracy to set us up with Wendy or some shit.

Also thought it was pretty clear Wendy has a good deal more experience/training when it comes to combat. And this wouldn't be the first time she has a seen a witch before it has existed right? I don't know the exact circumstances for that but it seems relevant.

But that's exactly it. All of her notable successes have hinged on forging social links or using social combat skills against opponents that can be viably reasoned with, and depending on said people for protection. Though she did well enough with guns vs. bears and hiding from Insane BRS Murderface, I'll grant you that. But in this Akashic Realm situation, we'll be facing at least hundreds of magical girls who have been described as little more than walking corpses waiting to witch out, and Ahriman who seems to be fully set on her goals of who-knows-what. They don't seem vulnerable to being talked down, and Oriko probably won't listen to anyone other than Kirika and perhaps Kyoko. Even if we sneak past them to confront Ahriman/Oriko, they will likely converge on the fight once it begins in earnest.

I'm not saying that she's not dependable, but we need to pick the right people for the right job. She'll be good for cloaking us and getting close, for sure. But once the fight begins, she will have to depend exclusively on the others to protect her while Chiaki goes for Ahriman.

It was not said until after the vote. And if I recall it was only 1-2 people which is a bit less than everyone. To me it was pretty clear such things were said to calm everyone down after the vote since everyone had their torches and pitchforks out after half the voters decided Decu was trying to stir shit or something ridiculous.

It was not a bad idea since the outcome would have been good and it was not a railroad since we were able to choose to do something else instead.

You narrow your eyes at no one in particular as you wait for the elevator, ignoring the salutes and greetings fervently whispered and stuttered your way. Why Kyoko? You were thinking about bringing her along, sure, but why is it important all of a sudden? Or is this their ass-backwards way of telling you that you SHOULDN'T be bringing her along?

Dildoes chuckles again. + No, nothing so crass, Nameless One, but we've been watching how the two of you are. The bond you share is remarkable, something I think has never existed in any of the other timelines. + That 'fwip' sound again. + I was friends with the Kyoko from my time, but it never went beyond that base level of acquaintanceship. The others have always had her as an ally of convenience, or worse, even an adversary. +

+ I...I was friends with Kyoko-san too, i-in my timeline, + Braids volunteers. + She...she rescued me a lot of times, a-and always looked after me like...like a big sister. + Your fragment of shy, stuttering innocence lets out a happy sigh, one tinted with memory. + She...she also tried to help me confess to Sayaka, even if she liked her too... +

+ Really? Well. I stand corrected, then. + Dildoes concedes, surprisingly without the usual spiteful venom that she always seemed to have whenever replying to your younger, softer self. + Not that unique after all, but the sentiment remains. Your Kyoko is willing to die for you, Nameless One, and this approaching altercation smells of grievous losses on both sides. But no matter what, your red-haired, spear-wielding maniac will see you through to the end, even if it costs her everything. +

Now, see, right there? That's no fucking way to recommend taking someone! You want to get out of this alive, sure, but not at the cost of your best friend, for fuck's sake!

Dildoes tuts here. + War has no place for such sentimentality, Nameless One, and this IS war, one Oriko started when she took up a Golden Weapon against us. Besides, do you think I bear this duty with any relish? No, I don't. But I comfort myself by being as honest and direct with you as possible, and I hope that you appreciate that. +

...Hnh. Fine. But what about the others? You can take four people with you, and with Kyoko there that makes three spots left unfilled. They've got recommendations for THOSE, right?

+ DON'T. TAKE. MIDORI. + Murderface growls, the first words she'd pulsed after Dildoes' icy reprimand. + TOO. DANGEROUS. +

+ ...I concur. Don't bring the Green One. + Dildoes says after a moment. + The Akashic Realm is no place for someone like her, even if she has walked in it before. Especially not where you're going. +

...That's it?

+ That's it. + Dildoes confirms. + Take whoever else you wish, like we have said. + A moment's hesitation. + Well, perhaps ensuring that they are the best at what they do counts as a recommendation, as well? But if I had to point that out for you, Nameless One, then I am grievously insulting the both of us. + Another chuckle.

Alright. Well....about the Akashic Realm, then. Do they have any idea what is it, really? Did it exist in their timelines too, or what?

Silence takes place here, one long enough for you to get on the elevator when it finally arrived, take it to the very top floor, where Kyuubey's Office is. Dildoes' pulsed reply comes just as you begin to walk the last corridor to your destination. Spotting your retinue - or at least, your Equerry and your best friend - leaning against the doors leading to Kyuubey's Office, clearly waiting for your arrival. Kyoko spots you the moment you come close enough, and she waves energetically in greeting.

+ We believe it is unique to your timeline, too. None of us has encountered something of this magnitude or severity before. Barrier or not, though, we are sure that the Transcendent One is involved somehow. +

...Yeah. You suspected as much, too.

+ This is a day of many wonders, I see. Perhaps you're not as hopeless as we thought. + Dildoes is smirking now, you're sure of it. + Is there anything else, then, Nameless One? +

You nod, just as you return Kyoko's frantic waving with a more sedate gesture of your own. You want to apologize to Braids for...well, giving her shit about Sayaka.

+ It's...it's fine, Matsuda-san. + Braids says after a moment, her voice barely a squeak. + I won't say I wasn't angry at you for saying it, but I...I guess I'm just strange for liking her, h-haha. + You could almost see her knuckle her own forehead in shy self-deprecation. + Thank you for...for apologizing, though. That means a lot. +

...Yeah. Alright.

+ If there's nothing else, then, Nameless One, we'll go back to watching you going about your duties. + Dildoes pipes up. + Remember what we talked about, and keep your wits about yourself. Treasure your enemies as well as you treasure your friends, because you never know just which you may end up relying on when the final day dawns. +

And what the hell is that supposed to mean?

No reply. Just silence, and the blessed lack of pressure-pain behind your eyes, the stress of pulsing back and forth somehow following the departure of the Three Stooges. Well, at least you'll be focused for this meeting, you think.

"Took you long enough." Sayaka greets you with her usual scowl, the blue-haired Eversor annoyingly morning-fresh and clean despite all evidence of being dragged out of bed by your exultant best friend. "Mami and the rest are inside, waiting for you."

You nod here, and turn to Kyoko, thanking her. The red-haired one of the melee monster pair accepts your gratitude with flushed cheeks and a grin. "Nothing to it! And, uh, sorry again for punching you, okay? No hard feelings, right, Murderface?"

Yeah. Of course. No hard feelings, you assure Kyoko. Sayaka shakes her head, an indulgent smile of her own curling her lips.

"Next time, just punch the goddamn wall or something." She chides your best friend. "Hitting a superior officer's got serious consequences to it, especially when it's the Warmaster. Good thing you're chums with Murderface, or else I'd have to mete out the punishment stated on the Primer for such an infraction."

"Aw, you'd do that?" Kyoko pales. "Come on, I didn't really mean to hit Murderface! I just got...carried away and everything!"

"You're not supposed to get carried away, that's the entire point. You're from the Ninth, not from the Sixth or the Eighth."

You shake your head, and make to push open the doors to Kyuubey's Office as the two begin arguing behind you. But before you do, however, you turn to ask. What IS the punishment for hitting a Warmaster, anyway?

Both Eversors look at each other, before Sayaka clears her throat, her cheeks tinged with crimson. "Well, Kharn sorta changed it around when she still wore the hat, but, uh..."

She leans in close and whispers it to you, and you find yourself blushing furiously as well, feeling a shiver of recoiling disgust crawl its way up your spine.

Yeah. No. You're not going to do that with Kyoko, Christ.

You don't do that kind of thing with your best friend. There has to be a law against it, or something.

Besides that little hiccup, the meeting begins without issue. Kyoko had done an admirable job of getting your retinue together in such short notice, with Mami and Midori already waiting inside the Incubator's Office when you entered it. Wendy is there too, clutching a mug of strong coffee as if her life depended on it, taking sips in between staring daggers at Midori.

Your personal Callidus seems to not be noticing this at first - until you saw her glaring her own metaphorical stabbing implements at your ex, particularly when the brown-haired girl sipped at her coffee or turned to the side as if to address someone invisible beside her.

In any case, you quickly relayed to them what you learned from Yuma, namely her plan of attack - a five-person kill team that she'll teleport directly into Oriko's base of operations to finally end her campaign of terror. When you brought up just where this particular base is - and you looked to Kyuubey for approval for revealing THAT particular nuggest of information - he merely nodded, as if quickly seeing how important this is, and how matters of confidentiality about the Akashic Realm can be ignored for now in light of this new information.

Sayaka, Kyoko and Midori all asked their questions about it, clearly oblivious to the Akashic Realm's existence until now. To no one's surprise, Mami wasn't, even offering her own input about it.

What was surprising, though, was Wendy volunteering information herself.

"...Haven't been in it myself." She'd said gruffly, in the half-slurred tones of someone still struggling from a lack of sleep. "But I've been in something similar. Somewhere just as bad. It isn't nice, but it's survivable if you don't do anything stupid."

Right. Well. That means you're fucked, then?

"...Probably." She takes a sip from her mug here, although even you can plainly see she's trying to hide a smile.

The conversation quickly turns towards the most important matter of the meeting: who's going on the kill-team with you. Both Sayaka and Kyoko immediately step forward, nearly bumping into one another in their haste. Midori, who'd been standing beside you the entire time, takes your hand in hers and gives it a squeeze - her own way of volunteering. Wendy, after a fashion, stands forward too - her coffee cup now empty, the caffeine waking her up enough for you to see the eagerness in her hooded eyes. "...Red Culexus owes me," she says simply. "I'm taking payment for every one of ours she killed. And yours, too."

...Right. Well. You--

"Chiaki-san, I'm sorry to make your job a bit harder," Mami raises a hand, an apologetic smile on her lips. "And I'm sorry to interrupt. But I wish to volunteer for the Kill-Team, as well."

Mami? You blink here. But...what about--

"I'm still a Magical Girl, Warmaster, and I'm still a card-carrying Vindicare, even if I'm no longer on the active roster." She smile turns just a bit brighter as she steps forward - a smile that immediately falters as she looks directly at you. "But besides that, I feel that...I may have mishandled Oriko, myself. I thought that being with her would be enough to allow her to grieve properly and move on from Kirika-san, but...well, it came to this. And we've all suffered because of it." She glances at Wendy, at Kyoko, and then at you. "Please allow me to take responsibility for my mistakes, Warmaster. Let me help you save Oriko."

...Ngh. This is gonna be hard.

Who do you take with you? You can only pick four.

It'd be too dangerous for Midori to be on the ground. But QB will no doubt be in contact with us and monitoring our progress, right? Perhaps she can be assigned to a command/tactical role instead.

Tough decision between excluding Midori or Mami...

Don't want to leave Mami behind because paranoia, and she would be useful in combat.

And I also don't want to bring Midori along because I imagine she might be a liability, but at the same time I want her to do stuff and bonds made in combat are the best.

Well I would rather not have bonds made and have her be alive than have her die I think. Was just hoping to patch things up between her and Wendy here.

Having Enishi would probably open up the stealth route, but personally I think I would just rather we have Wendy.

Personal bias aside, things are certain to become a bloodbath at some point even if we stealth it, when that happens I would like to have a full team of killers at that point and Wendy seems rather experienced when it comes to murder.

For the other three Kyouko and/or Sayaka, and Mami. Kyouko or Sayaka could be replaced but only one or the other, not both, and the people taking their spots would most likely be less combat oriented soooo...

Not changing my vote of Mami, Sayaka, Kyoko, and Wendy.

You light up a cigarette as you mull over your choices, looking at each of them in turn, as well as being painfully and acutely aware of the warm hand holding yours. You also bring to mind your two Rank Leaders - Rea Ashford and Karasawa Enishi, both you haven't really seen much in combat but are quite competent from what you can infer, seeing as they did manage to get their ranks in the already highly-competitive Ninth. There's also the fact that Enishi herself was instrumental in the success of the Kirishima op, her participation allowing you to complete that debacle without a single civilian casualty.

After a long while - with you belatedly noticing that the entire room had gone completely still and quiet, with every other occupant looking at you with bated breath - it's here that you make your decision, and announce them clearly.

The people you chose reacted predictably enough. Kyoko let out an exultant whoop as she punched the air. Sayaka merely nodded, her lips curling briefly into a tight smile, before turning to berate her red-haired companion for not taking this seriously as she did. Mami smiled at you in combined relief and gratitude. Wendy also nodded at your direction, with something approaching understanding flickering in her eyes, before she herself moved to murmur something to Mami. Something about needing to tell the High Priestess about this, or something.

[+ 1000 MAMI POINTS!]
[+ 50 WENDY POINTS!]

All well and good, fine. But the one reaction you were counting on - and had dreaded the moment you made your decision - also happened, but in a way you didn't expect.

"I...I suppose sempai doesn't need me for this, huh?" The soft, warm hand holding yours suddenly grows cold and clammy, her voice trembling just the slightest bit. You look up at her with worry - but instead of tears or even a glistening, tear-filled look of anguish, she is instead looking back at you with something approaching a calcified determination. Fragile, brittle, but determination all the same.

[-10 MIDORI POINTS!]

+ It's...it's fine, sempai. I understand why you're doing this. I kind of know how you think by now.+ She pulses this to you, a faint whisper sent through the tenuous connection of your attunement together.

It's here that she turns towards Wendy, fixing the American with a particular look: one without venom or anger or even jealousy, but a combination of all three. More than that, it was a challenging stare, one even Wendy seemed to be taken aback by.

Midori turns back to you a moment later, squeezing your hand again. The warmth from earlier returning to her fingers.

"Just...please promise me that you'll be safe. That you'll come back for everyone. And for me."

How do you react?

Magical Scribe Eleanor Slam versus Magical Entrepreneur Jael Russ

Here comes the person who takes over my shift. Her arrival would normally mean quitting time and lunch time for me, but looking at the hands on the clock at the front of the store – don't look at the numbers – I still have forty-five minutes, I think. And I'd spent the last fifteen trying to put stuff on the high shelves. I could get a ladder, but that's really embarrassing.

"Hey, new kid!" she shouts. I guess she does want something.

"Mm?" I murmur. I feel that was too quiet, though, so I also ask out loud, "Yes?"

The girl jerks her thumb over her shoulder towards the double doors in back, and informs me, "Boss says it's your turn for Zoo Duty."

I give her a look. "Zoo Duty?" I wasn't being serious about the kangaroos, and yet there it is.

My coworker nods her head. "Just head through the other double doors way in back," she informs me. "I'll take over here."

Well this wasn't in the job description I was given, but beggars can't be choosers. "Alright, thanks for the heads up!" I tell her, "and have a nice day!"

With the taller person taking over, I head back into the employees only area. Instead of going left or right, I head down the dirtied hallway straight ahead. I have to resist the urge to take a broom to the dirty footprints all over the floor. Maybe I can scrub them up if I come in during off hours on the weekend. I know overtime is frowned on when it's not necessary, but this is just something that bugs me a little. I doubt Jael would mind too much.

Hah. Look at me, being this fussy about cleanliness at fourteen. I must be finally catching the craziness that's inherent to magical girls. Or Eversors, anyway. Soon I'll be jumping out windows to get to places faster instead of trying to plummet to my death. Or I could go breaking down walls like I'm delivering drinks to people. Maybe I should get a boat to go with the cereal mascot outfit.

Pushing through the second set of double doors brings me to a much larger, even dirtier room. And by dirtier I mean holy shit I think that’s a dried bloodstain on the floor! The imposing metal door taking up the far wall does not help that macabre image. It looks more like an airlock than something that belongs in a corner store. Or it may be something to hold back a monster, with all those deadbolts, locks and such on it.

“Earth to Eleanor, come in Eleanor!” calls out the high-pitched voice of a child.

Snapped out of my gawking – that seems to happen a lot lately – I adjust my posture and stand up straight. “Hello, Boss,” I reply with some forced enthusiasm, “you needed me for something?”

“Absolutely!” Jael chirps, hands in both pockets of her trench coat – why is she wearing a trench coat over a suit, it doesn’t go with the hair bobbles – and fiddling with something. “I’m almost done verifying your identity as well.”

"What're you-" I try to ask before she shushes me. An odd, tingling feeling washes over me, before Jael claps her hands together.

"Well, either you're not a Callidus,” she says, as though that explained everything, “or you're really, really, really good."

"I... Huh?" Callidus? I’m not a Callidus.

"Anyway,” Jael continues, ignoring me and gesturing to the big scary door, “welcome to the Zoo, Eleanor!"

She looks so enthusiastic.

“…Could you explain what this is about?” I ask meekly. “I’m confused.”

Jael cants her head at me and frowns. "Eh? Didn't Sis-“ Hah, her face went red for a second. “Er, Leman Russ tell you about it?"

I shake my head. "No,” I respond, trying not to offend my boss. “She said I should work here for behind the counter experience while I'm doing my Eversor training."

Fuck, I must have said something wrong. Jael actually looks kind of upset. Well, her smile faltered, anyway. "The agreement was to not send me any rookies..." she grumbles under her breath.

“Um,” I ask after a moment’s silence, “am I in trouble?”

"Er, no!” Jael reassures me, sort of smiling again. “Not specifically! Well, it sort of is, but I should have read over your papers instead of simply taking Leman Russ at her word. Or she means to offend me intentionally, but I would really like to believe that is not the case." Her words really are not reassuring at all. Neither is her pacing around me like a predatory animal.

"So,” she continues, her smile never leaving her face, and her voice still cheerful as ever, “you claim she wanted you to work behind the counter, but from what I can tell, you haven't done so even once. Why is that?"

I thought this would have been explained to her, but I tell her anyway, "...Numbers and words trigger my Vanus trance, even if I'm out of-"

Jael comes to a halt in front of me, causing her ridiculous trench coat to swish around, and shouts, "a Vanus trance?!” Crap, she looks like a kid whose parents brought out the big birthday present. “You're an honest to goodness, real-life Vanus? And you're working here? For me?"

I feel like I need to proceed really, really cautiously right now. "Y-yeah." I answer slowly.

"I mean, I just assumed from the arm that you were another Eversor," she babbles rapidly, pointing at the bulky robotic arm. “That was the agreement - Leman Russ said you were an Eversor - but you’re a Vanus, too!"

"Huh? Uh, the arm is from Fu-" Ah, probably shouldn’t swear in front of her. "From Heather Crunch doing... Something I can't talk about." The Warmaster was very particular about what I couldn’t say if I wanted to keep my memories to anybody that wasn’t a rank leader, which was pretty much everything other than names.

This seems to drain away Jael’s enthusiasm. "Oh,” she murmurs sheepishly, “the incredibly dangerous girl with kangaroos loose in the top paddock? Yes, that would explain it.” She offers me a pitying smile. “You have my sympathies."

>> ☐ Attarou 10/25/14(Sat)15:11:12 No.35751428

I sort of smile back, but it’s a bit forced. "Thanks." Try not to think about it. Don’t think about how you almost had your head bitten off by-

"Eleanor?” Jael asks, snapping me out of my daze. “How would you feel about a change of position?"

"...Does it require working with letters and numbers?" I ask suspiciously.

"Yes?” Jael answers, her smile slightly bewildered. “It's clerical work, but-"

"No,” I interrupt her. Probably a bad thing to do, but I keep talking. “I don't want to do that sort of thing anymore. That's why I'm here. That's why I'm training as an Eversor. I hate… being a paperwork slave."

Jael says nothing and just continues staring at me with the same smile on her face. To fill the awkward silence, I tell her, "I'm sorry. I just can’t do it."

"Eleanor,” Jael says, her voice carrying a sinister growl, “you're surrounded by letters and numbers all day. That indicates to me that you have some control over it. So I don't buy your excuse at all." Fuck, she really wants me doing her number crunching for her or something.

"If...” I croak, then swallow before continuing, “if I try really hard not to focus on them, then it doesn't go off." Or I just focus on it and accept it, and hope to God I remember everything I’m supposed to when I’m awake. It took a lot of attempts to get Checkers’ number right.

"Eh?” Jael inquires skeptically, looking me straight in the eyes, “you've been doing that this entire time?"

I don’t dare blink. "Y-yeah,” I answer.

"This could be a problem in the future,” she muses, resuming her pacing around me. “I'm kinda-" she stops and clears her throat, "that is, rather surprised that you haven't done anything about it yet."

"What -can- I do about it?" I ask dejectedly, suddenly in a bit of a sour mood.

Jael shrugs. "I don't know,” she admits, “but I'd assume that, if not from the Sixth, you could get help from the Second, the Fourth, or the Thirteenth in some capacity.”

Yeah, no, I'm not going back to the Second for anything that's not life-threatening. They started giving me really scary looks after somebody pointed out my uncanny resemblance to a portrait of one of their old Inquisitors of Heresy/Witch Hunters.

Also they were kind of stuck up.

"In any case," Jael continues, "you are relieved from Zoo Duty until you're a full-fledged Eversor."

"Okay...?" I still don't know what Zoo Duty is about, but I guess I don't have to do it.

"I'll go over your file tonight and see if any other accommodations need to be made, but you need to take steps to deal with your trance issue on your own," she orders. "Even if Leman Russ said you're okay, if you can't find something soon, I'll have to let you go."

I'm going to get fired if I can't control my uncontrollable ability?

"Isn't that a bit much?" I groan.

This was a mistake. Jael's smile melts for the first time since I've met her, leaving only a deadly serious expression in its wake. "Eleanor, you would do well to remember that I am your boss," she informs me with icy coldness, her earlier cheerful tone gone as though it had never been there. "It is my job to put you to work and to make a quid, not to be your friend. Whatever your circumstances are, however badly Heather Crunch ruined your life, however much Leman Russ pampers you, I'm not going to help you any more than necessary. Is that clear?"

I swallow audibly before I dutifully reply. "Yes. Clear as crystal."

Jael's not looking at me anymore, instead staring at the ground and growling. "I don't know what Sis was thinking, letting someone like that run wild..."

This time I just keep quiet. It feels like I'm -this- close to being in trouble, and I don't want to cross that line.

"In any case, I believe that's everything for now." Jael glares at me and gives another order. "I suggest you forget you saw anything here." Feels like a damn lion is staring me down.

"Saw what?" I squeak like a cornered rat.

This was apparently the right thing to say, as Jael brightens immediately. "Exactly!" she shouts, seemingly in high spirits again. "Well, your replacement is already on the floor, so you're free to clock out and head home now."

"Oh!" I exclaim, kind of startled by her proclamation. I suspect that means I won't get paid as much for today, but that can't be helped. "Alright, uh, bye?"

"Have a nice day, Eleanor!" she calls after me as I leave the room with the frightening door. "And good luck with your training!" She shouts after I'm in the hallway. "And watch out for Callidus ambushes!" She shrieks after I'm through the second set of double doors.

I just go out and put my card into the reader before heading outside. As soon as I leave, everything starts to ache again.

Yeah, I… I guess this could be worse. But I don't think I'm crazy enough to be a good magical girl.

Trials of the Thrice-Cursed

Chapter 1-1: Wildcards

I used to work for the Ninth. It brought in a pretty comfortable amount of money back then, but right now I'm as poor as a hobo. Sure enough, just like my house, my bank account had disappeared into some rude black hole. I had no contacts left, no place to return to, no money to do anything with and no Officio.

I've went on rampages for less, but somehow I feel like it won't really help me this time.

I let out a long sigh and took in the evening air. It was cold. After all the rush and mayhem of today, it felt like a slap in the face. The "get your shit together" kind of slap in the face. I always liked the night, as cliché as that might sound. The cold not so much, but the peace and the dimmed light levels are what I mean. It was a lot more relaxing than daytime, easier to think.

It helped me calm down. Yeah, sure I was all sorts of fucked, but just freaking out about it wasn't going to do me any good; nor was trying to cling back to what was familiar. I decided then with a deep breath: Clean Slate.

I closed my eyes for a few seconds and took this time to let the decision sink in. When I opened them back I felt a lot more like myself. More confident and sturdy, despite my loss of my cherished Warbringer. I stopped wasting time and checked my inventory thoroughly.

- My now mostly useless cellphone.
- A large bottle of Vodka; glorious, true Russian import.
- A pair of Grief Seeds, unused
- Three small cylindrical, labeled metal containers bearing the names: "Rose", "Blue Fire" and "Barkweed".
- One magically sealed identical container with the label "Satrophine".
==[1/10]

>> ☐ Zweihart 10/25/14(Sat)15:17:42 No.35751531

I thought I had more stuff stashed in there... but it's the important stuff that mattered. The Grief Seeds most of all. My combat drugs were mostly full, except Blue Fire. I didn't have a chance to restock on that one in a long while. From the look of it, there still was enough for two uses. As for the Satrophine... Well the less mentioned about it the better.

When I made my way back into the city I was again feeling like a predator instead of a stalked animal. That was probably the most comforting part of all.

It felt good to be back in familiar territory

The next few days were strange, but mostly uneventful. I had to plan how to survive and deal with having no way to procure any basic necessities such as even food without stealing. I just decided to use magic to sustain myself for a while, but that was going to be draining, so I allocated a lot of time to scouting for Barriers. I didn't get a lot of luck with that, though.

"Are you going to act like a rat in a maze for much longer?"

I was following a trail when the voice hailed me in a bloodied back alley belonging to a run-down, forsaken area. I turned around in a blink and observed the figure that had apparently managed to be stalking me.

"What do you want?" I replied dryly, not in the mood for shenanigans.

"Now now, there's no need to be so defensive." The tall girl responded with an annoying, half-teasing tone as she made her way closer. She didn't seem armed, but in our line of work that didn't really mean shit so I stayed on guard.

"Believe me I have all the reasons in the world to be defensive right now, all of them." I sighed with some exasperation and resisted the urge to roll my eyes. I felt a bit of an itch and my mind wandered to the thought that if I had been a smoker this would probably be where I'd be reaching for a deathstick... or three.

When she reached about a few meters away she seemed to flinch at something, but managed to hide it pretty well with an annoyingly composed pace and expression. Might have been my eyes - you didn't come across black sclera every day... or shifting irises - but it could also have been anything I suppose. Hers were an icy blue and framed by long, flowing purple hair. She wore plain gray jeans and a sleeveless urban camo top.

"If that's true then what I have to say might be -especially- interesting to you." She continued in that pseudo-superior tone of hers without any signs of her earlier faltering, as if it never happened. I so hate her already.

I crossed my arms and leaned back against a nearby wall, raising an eyebrow "And what would that be?"

"You're on the run aren't you?" This time she dropped the line without any pretense of taunting. Cold, direct and down-to-busyness.

"...In a sense" I reluctantly let out before slowly tilting my head to the other side. "What's it to you? If you're a bounty hunter I'm sorry but you're so fucked that it's actually funny." It was a bit of bluff, but even in this weakened state I was still able to defend myself against a lot of things.

She waved one hand faintly in a small dismissive motion. "Oh no, quite the contrary actually." She put on a small smile. It was the warm and comforting kind, but my guts told me not to trust it. "I just wanted to let you know that in the.. aherm.. hypothetical situation that you were..." her smile grew a little more, somehow managing the difficult achievement of not looking horribly smug in the process. "There might be people in similar situations willing to lend a hand."

"So basically you're telling me you're an exile yourself, 'that it?" I cut the crap and went to the point with a cold voice. There was little that annoyed me more than being fucked with.

"You catch on quickly for an Eversor, but it's no good if you keep that unsightly attitude." Here she goes again with that smile.

"I'm going to assume you've been observing me for a while if you can tell that." I flatly ignored the second half of her comment. "But the real question here is, what are you going to do with that?"

Camo casually replaced a stray lock of her purple hair and shifted her position lightly, as well as her expression. "Well, no point in trying to play it all mysterious I suppose, fine, fine~." she let out a small sigh. "Look, you might be new to this, but rogue Magical Girls like us tend to get bounties on their heads pretty fast, so it's really better if we try to stick together."

Well, I never really -went- rogue so much as the entire universe around me decided to turn to shit, but it was still a valid point.

"This is what I'm offering to you; a place to stay, a way to get some work and a handful of people who you can trust not to backstab you the first chance they get."

I snorted lightly and rolled my eyes. "Yeah right, trust."

"You don't have to believe me right away, but it's better for everyone involved. Safety in numbers and all."

I shrugged lightly and moved away from the wall, uncrossing my arms. "Fine, I'll play along for now."

Chapter 1-2: Wildcards

I used to work for the Ninth. Even though back then I scored pretty high on the Bitch-o-meter, I still like to think I had fairly solid standards; and now I'm being coerced into what may or may not be a sparkley terrorist group. Well ok, I'm being of horrible faith right now, but I guess maybe deep down I'd actually find it funny if it were true.

I ended up following the tall girl with the long purple hair. From up close it looked soft, much more than it had any right to be in our line of work and with the half-fruity half-sweet smell to boot. I'd like to think that anyone who spends this much time grooming themselves and not training is doing it wrong, but I found out soon enough she was a Callidus so I supposed she could have a free pass. Her name was a bit more difficult to get out of her. She acted like it was all some kind of game again.

Suzume, she said she was called. Before long she brought me to the industrial district - a section of town I was a little bit less familiar with I'll admit. More specifically the old part of it, behind the more thriving ones. I... honestly didn't recall it being this run-down, but I just chalked it up to another of the differences and reminded myself to stop forgetting this wasn't the Mitakihara I knew anymore.

When she stopped we found ourselves in front of some large closed down factory. Well, I say "front" but to be fair this place was big and decrepit enough that it might as well have been any side so long as it had a big door.

"So, is that a Despair factory?"

"Just kidding."

"Your humor needs work." Suzume responded with an annoyed tone. Score, managed to get her out of that obnoxious always-composed appearance of hers. "A lot."
==[5/12]

I shrugged lightly and put on an innocent smile. "Maybe you just need to get that stick out of your arse." my own tone remained neutral and calm to add insult to the injury.

To her credit if she was pissed off she didn't show any of it, again. I could almost start to think it was one of those Callidus Tricks of hers; Perpetual Dildoness or something. "Cute, but you'll need to try harder if you want an unsightly reaction out of me." she finally spoke calmly before adjusting a stray purple lock.

"Don't mind if I take that as a challenge." I smirked, more than intent on getting through that armor.

"As a matter of fact I don't" she responded with a small smile and a spark in her eye. It seemed like she took it as a challenge as well and I certainly recognized that flame. She took it seriously. That was when I realized we may still have a chance to get along yet. Or at least not end up wanting to murder each other. "But we've wasted enough time already."

Without waiting for me she went ahead with a quick pace. It's as I followed her inside that I truly realized just how tall she was. I had to quicken my pace to keep up with her longer steps. That much wasn't a big deal, but what really hit me was precisely that it took me this long to realize it. I gave a glance back at her and it seemed so obvious now, but before she looked perfectly.. average. Callidus and their tricks, you never know when they're playing you or aren't.

The factory itself was just as decrepit inside than outside, though it seemed a bit bigger. Lighting was practically inexistent and most of it came from holes through the ceiling. Most of the equipment and doors were rusted almost to an unnatural degree and I couldn't really wrap my head around why the place hadn't been demolished just yet considering how valuable space is here in Japan.

soon enough we reached a small door to what turned out to be some sort of rest hall for the former employees. It was.. pretty shockingly contrasting with the outside. The room was sizable and furnished with fairly lavish furniture even though it was a bit of a mess. There was couches, a kitchen section, an over-compensatingly large TV with surround sound and all other sorts of conveniences, but it was all in one big room. I took a second to give it a look over but my main concern was elsewhere.

"You know, it was a pretty straightforward path from the entrance, people could stumble around this place pretty easily." I voiced my concerns with a detached tone that caused her to just laugh. That was new. Somewhat insulting, yes, but new.

"Callidus tricks~" she simply replied with a hint of smugness.

"Not buying it."

"Fine, fine." she sighed lightly and made a small dismissive hand gesture. "You were able to find your way because I was here and allowed it." she put emphasis on 'allowed' with just a little bit of that thick, slimy arrogance. "This entire building is under a Barrier, any intruders who enter it go through a rigged maze full of natural hazards and with no exit besides the one they came from."

That sounded legit enough, but there was just one little detail with that explanation that didn't really satisfy me. "And what about when you're not around? you can't keep that Barrier up 24/7 or when you're far away can you?"

"Callidus tricks~" she replied once more. I stared at her again. She stared back. It lasted a while longer this time. Finally she responded with a completely deadpan and straight "I'm not telling you that one."

Well, it was fair enough. After all even though she was going at lengths to make me trust her, -she- didn't have much of a reason to trust -me- with sensitive information just yet. Even this location, according to what she just explained I couldn't find again if I had wanted to backstab them myself.

"Hey, Suzume. Who's this?" another, much quieter and softer voice came from the other end of the room, but it was strange, as if mechanized by some sort of device. I turned to check and saw someone come in from an access to some other part of the complex. There was just one tiny problem: I recognized that one.

"What the fuck is this!?" I roared and brought one of my black claws up to Suzume's neck in a blink's time, the twisted, cold metal just a hair's breadth away from skin. The Callidus remained firm and calm, but the other girl did not. Before I knew it I found myself reeling on the ground with a pain sharp enough to make it feel like my head was being grinded by several chainsaws all at once.

"Suzume are you alright?" I could hear the other's steps quickly running this way, but I couldn't see; my eyes had gone blank from whatever it was she had done to me.

"Yeah, I'm alright Silke, you overdid it though." The Callidus sighed faintly once more, causing the second girl to let out a small concerned gasp. "Did you two have some kind of history you didn't tell me about, Silke?" she continued with some sort of big sister tone; comforting, yet with authority at the same time.

The pain finally lessened and I was able to get back to my feet slowly, even if it had grown manageable, my head was still pounding with the mother of all bad headaches for a reason I couldn't fully grasp. "E-eh? n-no, I.. don't know her" 'Silke' 's voice responded, in its same mechanically-corrupted yet somewhat soft tone. I'd even say she sounded innocent, but there's no such things in our line of work.

I was then finally able to get a good look. It was the girl in the weird-ass leather suit and biker helmet I saw in the parking the other day alright. The one I stumbled on when trying to not become Vindicare target practice. "..you were there..." I managed, pain still grasping me mercilessly. "You were there in the underground parking lot..."

Suzume gave a look between the two of us, allowing herself to show some amount of confusion while Silke let out a small yelp. The Callidus glanced at the shorter girl and tilted her head with a look that just said 'Well?'. "A-ah that!" she managed. "I was.. just keeping eyes on something.. There was a.. big anomaly and we thought a really mean witch was going to appear... but nothing came.. so I stuck around to make sure..."

Now it was my turn to be confused. "Witches? I'm.. pretty sure I know what anomaly you're talking about..." I winced a little, the pain making it difficult to focus or talk. "There was only me there... with a bunch of Vindicare on training who probably thought the same thing you did..."

Suzume's expression seemed to become a little worried at my pain and she stepped in on the story. "Silke, is something wrong with your suit?" "No, it should be functioning perfectly. Let me set it to the maximum." There was a small silence for a few seconds and the pain lessened to tolerable levels. I sighed deeply with relief. "Sorry for interrupting, go on." Suzume finally stated.

"Alright, what the fuck was -that-." I let out with an exasperated voice. The other two exchanged a glance again, as if I was saying something incredibly stupid. No need to tell it put me in even worse of a mood than I already was, but I knew better than to have another outburst.

"Didn't you learn about Culexus in Basic?" Suzume asked with a somewhat intrigued expression while Silke remained silent. I remained quiet for a moment as well, biting back an acrid reply.

"I didn't -go- through Basic" I finally spat with a little bit of embarrassment. "It's.. let's just say things were pretty complicated back then and I had an history... As for 'Culexus' yeah I kinda recall the name and the suits but that's about it.."

>> ☐ Zweihart 10/25/14(Sat)15:26:37 No.35751702

Suzume blinked once and literally facepalmed with a small, measured motion. "I see.." she took a small breath. "This might be an issue, but we'll fill you in about that in time." she headed over to a large, comfortable chair and sat down, crossing her legs before continuing. "No need to stay standing there like birds though."

I rolled my eyes before flopping on the nearest available surface. Silke picked a couch on the opposite side of me and I could feel my headache finally fully disappear at the distance. Strangely enough, I felt like I heard a very faint 'sorry' when she left.

"Alright, now that this is over... let's start again properly." Suzume broke the silence and shifted her position ever so slightly in her chair. She cleared her throat softly and looked up slightly before joining her hands. She couldn't look more blue-blooded even if she tried. "My name is Suzume Oyashima, ex Callidus to the Third." she then gestured to her friend. "This is Silke Schreiber, my adooorable little German Culexus, also formerly from the Third."

I glanced over at Silke who remained silent and almost looked like she was trying to disappear into the padding of her seat. Tough luck with the suit though, but I could practically sense her blushing. I reported my attention back on Suzume and took a small breath. "Ryuko Tatsuki, Eversor... Used to work for the Ninth." I stated with a small bit of hesitation.

Suzume nodded lightly and joined back her hands. "Alright, that's good enough. No need to get into the more painful details until you're comfortable with it." I raised an eyebrow and she just gave me that warm smile again. I wanted to distrust it, I really wanted to, but I couldn't help but find myself thinking it was starting to look genuine. Was it just my paranoia again? "Now what was that earlier? How you two supposedly met up."

I produced my bottle of Vodka from my inventory and took a long gulp before setting it down next to myself. All this talking was getting me thoroughly dry and I was being way too sober for this shit. "To keep it short; I was fighting some Witch and her Barrier had some sort of metaphysical seizure - I honestly have no idea what the fuck it was - but the end result was that when I was able to get my bearings again I was attacked by a bunch of ambushed Vindicares. I fucked off and took cover in some underground parking lot where I saw... Silke... I thought she was with them."

Suzume remained a quiet listener until I finished, not even commenting on my drinking. "I see. We have two Vindicares, but they aren't around at the moment. Your situation does look rather strange however and I have no doubt it's tied to this anomaly Silke sensed and it explains your reaction earlier."

The little Culexus nodded lightly and finally spoke up again. "F-for all it's worth, I apologize... I didn't mean to startle you like this.." Even despite the Vox-caster, the words seemed genuine. "It's fine, shit happens and all" I raised a soothing hand.... on second thought that was a bad idea; I saw her flinch lightly at the sight. "I don't hold it against you, but never ever use... whatever the fuck it was you did to me just now."

"I-I can't make any guarantees... but I'll try..." she responded before Suzume interfered. "Now that you 'bring' the topic. Would you mind explaining what happened to your hands? I think it's disturbing her."

I sighed deeply. I knew this question would come sooner or later, but I was still a bit early for it. The marks of my Failings. "Let's just say I used to play a very dangerous game and I ended up burning myself on the flame. Those are permanent reminders of that."
==[11/12]

>> ☐ Zweihart 10/25/14(Sat)15:28:49 No.35751751

The explanation didn't seem to satisfy Suzume while Silke's expression was unreadable behind that visor. They were polite enough not to press further about it. "As for your eyes, can I assume it's related?" Suzume shifted the topic with her usual calm. Now that I think about it, it really made her look like really in control of things, to be always so composed like that.

"Yeah, somewhat" I nodded lightly. "It's kind of difficult to explain actually, but if we end up sticking together then you'll understand soon enough - gotta see to understand." the Callidus remained quiet for a few seconds, taking in the answer but not voicing her dissatisfaction if she had any.

"Alright, that's enough for now. Feel free to make yourself at home, I have a few things to take care of." She stood back up and headed to the door at a leisurely but poised pace. "Play nice now~" and with this she left me with the short Culexus who had been silent for a while longer.

This was going to be awkward.

Human Resources 4: Parthing Shots

Shimizu Yumishita. A name to ruin my day.

Well, that's not quite right; it's most of my days, lately, not just one. Sunrise till sunset - and let's not kid myself here, I don't go off the clock at sunset - it seems like all I get to deal with. Some lunatic with a crossbow shooting up our best and brightest... which, I admit, sometimes aren't that special or even bright. We take what we can get. Point is, it's a loss, something which I'm here to stop. With her wish, though... Ah, Petey, this is why you've gotta have me around for contracts. Looks like she ran circles around his clueless little ears.

Going to be a real pain to catch her, now.

“I won't say 'I told you so', but...”

“Your objection is noted, Ryouno. I will be sure to consult you on future contracts.”

“Hey, let me help you, that's all I'm asking for.”

“All? I suppose I must have imagined your salary, then.”

...Huh. Didn't expect that kind of crack from the little guy. Put a smile on my face, somehow, until the rest of the office made me all dizzy again. Whole place is crazy, even if it's not quite as bad as the River of Tales. Just wasn't really made for humans. You'd think he would fix that, after all this time, but I don't think my hints quite got through, and either he couldn't be bothered or... really had no idea it was that bad.

Ah well. Wouldn't be in this job if I wasn't ready for a little weirdness now and then.

Still don't get this Yumishita kid. I mean, yeah, revenge and so on, I can see that. Petty little brat, but I kinda get it. What I don't understand is the way she's doing it. Shooting up the rabbit, that much is pretty obvious, and it's around when I found out how little that means. At least he went and ate the corpse somewhere out of sight, so I guess he's learning a thing or two about tact. She ran off before we could catch her, seemed to just melt away. And then...

>> ☐ Malal 10/25/14(Sat)15:30:52 No.35751798

And then what?

Shoot up magical girls from the Third, sometimes even the Ninth, with no rhyme or reason? Camp out in witch barriers and snipe down all comers? It just doesn't hold up, even as some kind of revenge story. She can't have snapped completely yet, that'd probably make her witch out or something. But if not, then... why? I just can't see the point in it all. Not that it matters much with the mountain of corpses she's racking up, but it might help a bit with figuring out how she works.

“You got anything, Peter?”

“Very little. What I do see here is a pattern, however. Though there is a semi-random element to her choice of location, Yumishita appears to gravitate towards the barriers of powerful witches. Whether she does so because they provide better hiding spots or an increased flow of victims is, I'm afraid, a question only she can answer. Of note, however, is the fact that she targets magical girls exclusively, and does not assault civilians, including victims of witches. Typically, if a witch brings in too many civilian victims, she quickly disposes of the offending witch. Naturally, since the resulting grief seed is not returned to us, this is in itself a problem.”

Wonderful, now she's costing us grief seeds, too. Something didn't quite click here, between the samaritanism and the whole psychotic serial killer thing she has going. Still, it's a start. At least we've got a decent hunch about where to spot her.

“So we hit the biggest, nastiest barrier we can find, then, and we root her out. Or... we could try shoving some civvies in there to lure her, but that'd be a tough one to explain to the kids. Call it a second priority. We hunt her in her own element, in the worst place we can think of. Am I hearing this right?”

“Approximately.” Oh, joy. And it's my job to do something about this. At least I'm not going in person.

“Send a force into the worst witch barrier we can find to hunt down a rogue Vindicare – one that's killed about two dozen already – and hope it's the right place. Can we afford that kind of bloodbath on the numbers we've got?”

“Can we afford to leave her at large?”

Hate it when he's right. He has a point, though. We can't very well afford the meat grinder option with the numbers we've got right now. It's about time we made it stick. Ordinarily I'd want a squad or three for something on this scale, but since we can't just grab whole human waves for this – assuming for the sake of the argument that we're calling magical girls human – I'm going to have to hand-pick a group.

“Peter, I'm going to go have a chat with Masame. See what I can figure out for our plan. Permission to leave?”

“Of course. I look forward to any progress you may make.”

“Careful with all that 'looking forward' talk, now. Got to keep those pesky emotions in check, right?” ...And he just kinda froze, for a second. Couldn't exactly read his expression, obviously, but I think I hit a nerve. Funny idea, really, that something can still bug him. Didn't feel like pressing it, somehow, so I just showed myself out.

Hitomi's room – she couldn't let me in fast enough when I knocked at the door – isn't quite most people would expect. It's a loud, lively sort of place, where the TV never switches off and there's usually strobe lights turned on overhead. Not to mention music blaring from a couple different speakers around the room. Honestly, the whole place looked five seconds away from some kind of rave. Not that she's the type.

Always gave me a bit of a headache. Can't help feeling a little old, too. She says the white noise helps to keep the visions away. Me, I'd much rather she held onto anything she might be able to learn, but we can't tell her that. ...Which reminds me, I should talk to the rabbit about changing up contracts. At least let us track soul gems or something, in case we get another renegade. Shouldn't be too difficult.

“Oh, um, please have a seat, Miss R- I mean, Harumi. Sorry it's so messy in here, I haven't had a chance to-”

“It's fine, really! Try to relax, before I start scaring the others. Working for Sanbey doesn't make me some kind of inspector, you know. Did the others drop by again?”

She nods. Figured. She's got her a slightly bigger dorm room than most – it's an easy way to keep the precious prognosticatrix relatively happy – and doesn't exactly know how to say no, so the rest of the Officio tends to crash the place on the regular for whatever they can think of. They're a whole lot messier than she'd ever be, so the place ends up looking like a bomb went off, half the time.

Out of curiosity, is she based off, or have a face catch from, any character(s) in particular?

Screen's blinking with another reminder of the visit, showing... I think that one's... it's whatever. All I know is that I got lectured last time I called it Street Fighter; never had much of a head for this stuff. Way she explained it, her precognition moves to just reading the next few seconds if she's in a dangerous situation, and she's trained her head into seeing that as just about the same as combat. Sounds ridiculous to me, but if it works, I guess. Went about five rounds with her once, pretty sure she practically cheats at this by existing. Always had a hunch that the real reason's more about getting to feel smug about something. Like a seer has a shortage of excuses for that.

...Whatever. The point. That is, after handing her a batch of cookies I made last night, and chatting about nothing in particular for close to half an hour. It's not a waste of time if you need to do it to keep everything running smoothly, and I try to tell myself that while the rest of my head's screaming at me that I need to move along.

“Ah, Hitomi?” I asked like I'd just remembered. “Sanbey and I were hoping you could help us with something. You've... heard about the Yumishita case, right?”

“Of course. Were you going to send-” Ha. Ha ha ha. Ha. No, girl, we're not throwing you into the thick of it, you're too handy to be cannon fodder. Nothing about a prognosticatrix really says 'front lines', anyway. Would just be a waste of everyone's time.

“Oh, no, no. Don't worry, Hitomi, nothing like that. I just wanted to check something. This might sound a bit silly to you, but I never had much of a chance to learn about how... anything a Vanus does really works. Can I ask you a question?” That takes a minute to click, like she'd never even considered that she'd have a choice, but somehow she only seemed to be more eager after it.

>> ☐ Malal 10/25/14(Sat)15:35:33 No.35751903

“Please, go on. If there's anything I can do to help...” Sometimes I feel like all she ever wants is for someone to tell her she's doing a good job. Who's a good oracle? You are! Yes you are! Ah, whatever. Makes it easy to keep her happy and far from witching out.

“Can you track someone?”

“...Yes and no,” she answers after thinking about it for a bit, looking a little embarrassed. “I've heard that others can just scry, but even with the River, it's a bit unreliable for me. Do you think you could get... a piece of her? A hair or something? With that, I should be able to track her down.” Well, what do you know. I had a hunch, but it all seemed too witch doctor-y to me. Shows what I know. I wonder for a moment if it's coincidence or the stories come from real magical girls way back, then decide I don't care.

“That's perfect!” I tell her with a little clap of my hands. 'Perfect' as in it'll take going through hell and high water to get her what she needs, but it's a start. “I'll get started on that as soon as I go back to the office, then. Thank you, Hitomi; I think you might have just rescued us.”

“I haven't really-” Done much. I know. Not yet, anyway. Instead, I put one arm around her shoulders and shush her gently. Can't have that.

“Now now, you've helped more than enough; we really couldn't do this without you. ...Enough about work, though. How are your headaches lately?” If I had to guess, it was something to do with her visions, but she seemed to get them on and off. Looked surprised that I even remembered, actually. I guess she doesn't know how many notes I keep. The little props you use to show someone you really do care.

“Still here,” she admits after a bit, one hand on her temple. “I've been... seeing more recently. It's not helping much.” A quiet laugh and a sheepish little smile. Gotta admit, I like her spirit if nothing else, trying to shrug all this off.

“I had a feeling,” I tell her, all frowning concern. “Let's see... you'll need rest, obviously. I'll talk to Sanbey about that.” Simple enough, may as well have her recuperate before any big oracle work. “I'll try to get you something for it, too. I hate to say it, but you might want to turn the music off, or at least choose something more soothing, otherwise you'll only make it worse. If it's anything like the last migraine I had, you won't want anything that can rustle, either. Would you like to have that cleaned up?”

I point at the mess of candy wrappers practically burying the floor, and she tries to do something about it first, but I get her to stay put with a little pat on the head. Takes all of ten minutes to sweep the whole mess into a bag and seal it shut. I stay another half hour past that and chat with her, tell her it's nothing, get her to cheer up. She takes it pretty well, says she's eager to help, and eventually we split up. I'd like to think making arrangements for her break with the rabbit over the phone while she was still around made a difference.

Let's see, I'm going to need a team to track down one rogue Vindicare, and get... something, anything to scry on her with. Maybe even just pick up something she's dropped? Probably best to sneak around instead of getting shot to pieces. Someone to keep them from being spotted, another to figure out just where she is in the barrier, and someone who can... well, who can actually fight. I'm not sending just a Callidus and a Vanus into a major barrier.

Yeah, I think I know the ones. Just a few calls to make.

Anchoro

The design is older than antibiotics. It was the epoch of an age; the template that all successors would draw from and be compared to. Despite 102 years of improvements, refinements and replacements, the original is still manufactured, carried and used – some attribute it to quality, others to foolish nostalgia. But as antiquated and unrefined as it was... it still worked.

That's where I'd start – at the beginning.

It arrived in a plain shipping box one Friday morning, along with the shop manual and some supplemental reading. I carried it to my room and stuffed it under my bed, and for two weeks I studied patiently, digesting each page before accepting the next. When I finally tore away the brown paper and revealed the pistol, gleaming in its grease coating, I felt nothing special – it was a finely-crafted tool, but nothing more; the internal workings surprisingly, even elegantly simple. The real challenge would be learning to use it.

Fabiola and the Head Maid frequently left the property to attend to this or that. While they were out, I was in the single-lane range that spanned the length of the basement. Soon the malfunctions multifarious sent me back to my studies; trying to determine why ammunition and parts in perfect repair would fail to operate.

I took the pistol completely apart for the first time, every nut and screw, carefully measuring each piece and comparing it with the dimensions listed in the shop manual. I bent over my workbench, scowling at the neatly laid-out components.

Every part was in perfect order. It was something in the process; the actual movement of machinery that was bedeviling me. I returned to my research, trying to flush out the ghost in the gun.

It didn't occur that anyone would be happy to see her! Or these writeups, especially with how new they are. Thanks!

To answer your question, all of my characters are made from whole cloth; borrowing stuff does not sit well with me. With that said, many people have described Harumi as 'fake Mami'.

Sanbey was originally inspired by the idea of sticking closer to how Kyubey is in the show, but it, ah, slipped from there. I'll be nice to myself and call it character development, I suppose.

What I learned astounded me. The parts might be simple, but the actual cycle of loading and firing - the moving, eating, breathing mechanization of the action – was a delicate balance of carefully-opposing forces. And they were easy to upset. The ammunition's shape and power, the strength of the springs, even the design of that laughably tiny bit of metal, the magazine follower – it all had a purpose in that process. Change one thing and you risked the entire ensemble; the invisible interplay of force that flashed in your hand for a fraction of a second with each trigger pull. Even holding the weapon too loosely could interrupt those careful symmetries.

That was the real genius of the engineer – controlling and balancing those ethereal forces through such elegantly simple parts. It was in everything I couldn't see in the design diagrams; an invisible world extrapolated from the lines and clean numbers.

I was utterly fascinated.

Over the next few weeks all manner of brown paper packages arrived at the door, the doorbell ringing even as the 'discreet delivery service' my family favored for such matters cruised away in their unremarkable mud-colored sedans. Recoil springs, new magazines, guide-rod systems, different ammunition – I hastened to try them all, recording the results, racing from the workbench to the range and back; baffled by unexpected results, overjoyed by confirmed experiments.

I'd read everything about the old pistol on the internet, then read everything over again to filter the bullshit through my experience. I learned how many modern “features” were just idiotproofing, or plain pointless.

I realized, then, why the ancient design was still manufactured, carried and used. Why it still worked. The users understood it, through and through.
In the end, there are no silver bullets.

I'd hoped Fabiola didn't know – but if (or inevitably, when) she did, I trusted her to respect the message I sent by keeping my studies private. The point of my intensive effort over the past weeks, including ordering my own weapon – when I had a combat expert in my employ with her own private arsenal – couldn't have been lost on her.

This is something I had to do alone.

Thus I wasn't entirely surprised when Fabiola cornered me one morning in the living room. I'd been reading the morning paper with intense disinterest and had just been flipping to the daily comics (for what little good they were) when she entered. She wore a small, knowing smile and bore a little brown box in both hands.

“Good morning, young master,” she said, the smile warming her voice as she bowed slightly. “May I beg a moment?”

“O-of course, Fabiola,” I replied, keeping the newspaper up long enough to cover my swallow. The box was far too small to contain my pistol, but for a moment it'd looked terribly similar. I tossed the newsprint onto the coffee table casually and tried to look innocent. “What's up?”

She approached with her usual stately grace, the little box in her hands seeming to glide closer with nary a jostle. “I understand you've developed an interest in firearms.”

I felt the blood drain from my face – I knew how Fabiola and the Head Maid felt about me being exposed to 'their world,' as they'd called it on the rare occasions it'd been discussed – but I didn't break eye contact. I trust Fabiola with my life; she wouldn't broach the topic now without cause. I nodded weakly. “A little.”

She gave me that wondrous little smile, the one that reflected mischievously in her piercing green eyes – she was amused. “I'm not upset, Master Lovelace – the art and science of firearms is a worthy pastime enjoyed by many sportsmen.” She took another graceful step forward and laid the little box on the coffee table before me, making her motion into a sort of smooth, elegant bow. In the bright rays of the morning sun the little wooden brown-and-black container looked serious and somber. I glanced at Fabiola for explanation.

I leaned over, apprehensive – but excited. Fabiola had found out (how much, I dare not guess) but she wasn't displeased – she was even offering me training, in her indirect way. Considering how fast the Head Maid had binned the tranquilizer pistol, this was a sign of trust not to be discounted lightly. I reached out apprehensively – what would it be? A .22 training pistol, for learning technique? A Makarov, for simplicity? What did my maids think me ready for? How had the judged me and my private studies? Carefully, I lifted the lid.

I stared at the little oiled pistol within for a long, steady moment, my mind numbly processing the revelation. Then I let the lid fall closed with a crisp little clack!

Fabiola was patiently watching me with an inscrutable expression.

That's when I started to laugh.

Just a wicked little snigger at first as it dawned on me, then another, and like that the floodgates burst and the laughter rolled out of me as I slowly slid off the sofa, helpless. Every time I thought they were subsiding, some new facet of the weapon chimed in my memory and sent me into new paroxysms of helpless mirth. I clutched a hand to my face in a useless attempt to stem the tears as my lungs burned, the merciless damned laughter continuing its rampage. I'd finally regained control, reigned it into a quick, pained wheezing when I glanced up and saw Fabiola – cool, placid, professional Fabiola – staring at me in stunned, open-mouthed shock, and I was off again, sliding completely off the sofa, legs kicking weakly underneath the coffee table.

Later – a long time later, it feels like – Fabiola was leaning over me, a hand against my forehead, checking for fever. “Young master? Young master!? Are you feeling well?”

I wiped my tear-stained face with my sleeve clumsily, a few straggling giggles escaping as I did. “Oh, Fabiola... very... very nice...”

She looked at me with the frank alarm of someone tending a mental case. “Master Lovelace...?”

I nodded at the table. “That. That gun. Oh.” I shook my head as I shakily pushed myself back on the sofa. I felt weak, but light, like something had come and gutted me out. I plucked the gun from the box and laid it in my palm.

'I know what this is,” I said, looking down at the little H&K P7.

“... yes?” Fabiola replied cautiously, as close to nonplussed as I'd ever seen her.

Fabiola blinked. “Excuse me?”

“This,” I said, tapping the lever on the front of the grip. “A clumsy cocking system designed for morons terrified of carrying with a loaded chamber, just in case multiple redundant safeties magically fail. And this,” I tapped the underside of the barrel, “a unique gas delayed blowback system that not only doubles the cleaning required but makes easy replacement of worn barrels impossible, making it uniquely awful as police service pistols. And best of all, it burns your finger after putting two magazines through it.”

I paused for breath here, still winded from my attack, and let it out with a miserable sigh. “Perfect for a moron who shot himself three times in the leg, in other words.” I dropped the little gun back in its box and flipped the lid closed.

Fabiola slowly settled onto the sofa beside me. I felt her hand take mine, delicate and warm. “Garcia,” she said softly.

I started with surprise. I couldn't remember the last time she'd called me by my first name.

“That's simply a matter of training and practice, Master. Anyone can do that. But not everyone has the clarity of mind to analyze a situation and make an accurate call in the midst of chaos, like you did. I meant what I said that night – you exceeded my expectations.” She gave my hand a gentle squeeze, and I returned it – but I didn't meet her eyes. “And you have obviously been... diligent in your studies,” she said with a trace of admiration. “I was expecting a comment about bullets backwards in the magazine, to be honest.” The smile was evident in her voice.

Internet, I realized. She'd cottoned to my browsing – and nothing more.

Just weeks ago her praise would made me duck my head to hide blushing cheeks – but now it rang hollow in my breast. I slipped my hand out of Fabiola's thin glove and walked to the fireplace. Above the mantlepiece hung the most prized heirlooms of my family; the weapons that our ancestors carried from the battlefields of Espania, across the unforgiving Atlantic to the shores of the dangerous New World. The weapons they'd used to carve out our future and fortune.
I reached up, standing on tiptoe, and with my fingertips lifted my favorite out of its rack; the gleaming blade I'd admired since I was old enough to walk. The spada da fante, infantryman's sword; a graceful, slender blade protected by a beautifully wrought basket hilt. The maker's mark upon the ricasso proved it a legendary Toledo blade, capable of bending in a half-circle and ringing off a steel hemlet without harm. It was sealed in a thin film of plastic, allowing for display without degradation, but the nicks and scratches of past battles were still visible on the long, bright blade. It was a magnificent museum piece, worth a king's ransom alone.

I'd never touched it before now.

I stepped into the middle of the room and gripped the hilt, flourishing the sword. It was everything I'd imagined and better - aggressively forward balanced; seeming to throw itself into every swing and thrust. I took it through the guards, the lunge, the parry, the riposte; my footwork flawless, my form splendid. I finished with a salute, thumping the hilt to my sternum and bowing slightly to Fabiola, who was standing again, watching me impassively.

“Your father taught you well,” she says quietly.

They're just a departure from what we usually see in the setting.

It has a darker sort of feel to it, without all the usual sort of badassery to distract from it.

Really, it feels a lot closer to the original PMMM setting, with the girls knowing far less than they should. But from the prospective of a manipulator. I really like Harumi's whole put-upon middle-manager shtick, her way of sarcastically admitting what she's doing in her internal narration in a matter that allows her to avoid actually confronting it. Almost has a Kafkaesque feeling to it.

I turned the blade around in my hand, admiring it wistfully. “He told me that in old Spain, knowing how to handle a blade was like learning to drive, today,” I said quietly, remembering the excitement of our sparring matches in the Venezuelan sun, my enthrallment as Father shared a story afterward, never the same one twice. “It was an essential skill. Part of growing up. Part of what defined a man.”

Fabiola clasped her hands before her demurely, her gaze falling to the floor. “Master... is this about Iori?”

The name hit my stomach like sour milk, and the memory it conjured wasn't much better. Iori. I'd listened to her songs nonstop, plastered my computer desktop with her photos, even watched those inane 'interviews' to see what she was like offstage, naturally, as her own person.... and meeting her in person still blew me away. The life in her eyes, the warmth of her smile, the potency of her presence – I'd been stunned speechless. That wore off by next morning, when our conversation flowed naturally, but Iori hadn't: her genuine giggles of delight flooding me (and my cheeks) with warm pleasure.

Then Matsuda showed up, and it was over. The truth set in like an incubating disease; her texts tapered off, her words grew cooler... and then she bawled out her forbidden love across some ridiculous theme cafe where everything's named after death (how apropos.) I remembered how cold that'd felt, sinking heavy into my gut as I turned off the computer monitor and stared at the blank screen.

The nightmares were mundane trauma before then; but after Iori judged me, so did the dreams. The empty, tortured eyes of the enslaved women stared at me as they began their slaughter; the screams and soul-piercing shrieks of the victims beseeched me as the cold blades pierced them. And above them all, the booming, mad voice of Kilgore. The architect. The murderer.

The man I'd implored my maids to spare.

Fabiola had noticed, of course, when I'd withdrawn from life, staying up late and waking early, cloistered in my room and keeping my own counsel.

She hadn't noticed when my melancholy turned monastic.

She hadn't noticed the Colt.

I shook my head once. “No,” I said quietly. “This isn't about- about Iori choosing Chiaki.” I took a deep breath and locked my gaze with Fabiola's, forbidden words on my tongue. “This is about Father. About the Incident. About why we moved to Japan in the first place.”

The sword lanced forward in the textbook thrust I'd practiced since age six, the tip hovering ten inches from Fabiola's nose. “I have the training. I have the practice.” My voice dropped to a cold, flat whisper. “How long would I last in a swordfight with you, Fabiola?”

Her brilliant emerald eyes bored into mine down that stretch of cold steel, the truth hovering in air between us.

“It's just... mechanics,” I continued. “And you need them, but that's not where the difference is made. I know that much.” I took a deep breath to steady myself before those flat emerald eyes. “Don't teach me how to shoot, Fabiola. Teach me how to fight.”

MAGICAL GIRL NOIR QUEST
THE FALL OF CHIAKI MATSUDA

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 10/31/14(Fri)09:39:05 No.35870773 Archived

You look up at the worried Callidus in front of you and and flash her one of your rare, sincere smiles. The sort that you've been practicing in front of a mirror, so that it would resemble something of an actual positive facial expression rather than a brief and unnatural stretching of the lips.

If you don't come back, you tell her, then she's free to remarry.

Midori blinks at you for several long moments of stunned silence, before going completely and utterly red. Her jaw working up and down, trying to give voice to words that just wouldn't come out. Behind you, Kyoko's sniggering and Wendy sighing is barely audible, but you hear them all the same.

"Re...remarry? I...s-sempai, I mean, um..." Your taller girlfriend begins to stammer here, in that curiously cute way whenever she gets too overwhelmed about something - but before she can really get into it, something seems to happen inside her that makes her stop in her tracks.

Something that makes her suddenly reach forward and grip you by your shoulders, with a strength you've never have believed existed in the soft Callidus if it wasn't about to shake your glasses of your face right now.

>>35870773

"No! Sempai, please, I know what you're doing right now, too!" Your eyes go wide as she bodily shakes you, not hard enough to cause any pain or knock your glasses askew, but it does wipe the smile from your face some - making you realize that right here, right now, Midori was doing her best to be firm. To be strong. Not just at the premise that you're about to step into hell to kill a False Prophet, but to you, too.

"You're...you're trying to make me feel better, and it's not going to work! I know what you're about to go into and I'm not letting you go without that promise!"

"Oi, Midori!" Sayaka's call is a sharp bark, but one more of surprise rather than of threat. "That's the Warmaster you're talking to--"

You hold up a hand to silence your Equerry - something she does quickly enough - before placing that hand on top of one of Midori's own. Giving her fingers a squeeze, as here and now, in the austere coldness of your Incubator's office, you temporarily trade roles with Midori as the one calling for calm. The irony of that isn't lost upon you at all, nor the irony of you making another promise that you may not be able to fulfill at all.

"I promise." You tell her, as firmly as you can. "I promise I'll come back."

Midori's reply is to glare back down at you for a few more moments, as if scrutinizing your eyes, your face for any sort of tell that would give away that particular lie - before finally pressing you into a close, warm embrace that made it feel as if you'd suddenly been sandwiched between two warm clouds. She lets go after a moment, one hand reaching up to wipe at her eyes, but the smile on her lips is a relieved one.

"...Thank you, sempai. I know what that means, too - that means that you're going to do your best to come back no matter what happens." She sniffs here, wiping at her eyes again, before looking towards Kyuubey as she fishes out a handkerchief from a costume pocket. "Kyuu...Kyuubey-san, is there some way I can still help Semp--I mean, the Warmaster? A more active role than simply just waiting here for her to return?"

The room is deathly silent as all of you see a side of Midori you haven't quite seen before. Even Kyuubey seems to be surprised, his crimson eyes blinking once, twice in silent astonishment. "Er...well, I would appreciate a hand in relaying information to the Kill-Team once they're in the Akashic Realm, Hanegawa. You can assist me with mission control if you wish."

Midori nods. "I"ll do that, then. When can I start?"

Silence again, an awkward one, before Kyuubey replies. "As...as I have been made aware, it will be a few hours still before Chitose Yuma can perform her duties, so this operation won't be starting until then. In the meantime, I can instruct you on the use of the new communications system we'll be using - one that will work with the turbulent tides of the Akashic Realm and not simply be drowned out by all the magical interference." A moment, before Kyuubey blinks again, still obviously wrongfooted by the entire thing. "Is this...acceptable to you, Hanegawa?"

"Yes, very much. Thank you, Kyuubey-san." The smile on Midori's face is - well, there's no other word for it - professional. One that reminded you very much of the soft half-smile that a certain blonde goddess of victory would use to get her point across, either during a corporate board meeting or a strategic huddle between squad leaders.

Professional, just like Tomoe Mami was and had always been.

It's...you don't know exactly how to feel about it. It's a new side of Midori, one completely at odds to her stuttering, easily-embarrassed self, but...it's certainly not a bad one as far as you're concerned.

"Very well." Kyuubey speaks again, bringing you back into reality as he addresses you directly. "Matsuda, I would suggest that you and the chosen members of your Kill-Team take this time to prepare yourselves as well. If we are to eliminate the threat of the Prophet once and for all, then time is of the essence."

...Yeah, that's right. You have a bunch of stuff to do before the op itself. You'll have to pick up the Golden Katana from your personal vault, for one. You also have to go and see if Tiny Pete's already fixed - your terminator buddy's gotten you and the people important to you out of trouble more than enough times, and you want him with you if every it comes to a point that you needed to call upon him again.

And besides, you have something in mind on what to do with him, if he's good to go for this op.

What do you do?

And in any case, I am more concerned with things like Stooges trying to protect our mind against mental attacks from Orikos Culexus. Offering skill and advice if we run into Homucifer or his dolls or Pinky. Braids helping pull stuff out of our shield. Telekinesis. And so on.

Pretty sure that qualifies as having the GW with us. So having a holstered DEagle close to our body and carrying a katana will essentially mean we are using two GWs. The gun perhaps not to its fullest extent, but its there.

Though a test of how difficult it is to use both actively would be worth it too (for example, use deagle to shoot dummy targets and then engage in a swordfight with Sayaka). See if its difficult to keep control.

Better to learn if something like that is dangerous in controlled conditions, with say Kyoko and perhaps others watching so we can be stopped if we lose it.

The katana and deagle can feasibly be one-handed.

Katana especially, theres a basis of using a Katana and lighter sidearm together (nitoryu etc).

Homura, and by extension Chiaki has been fully capable of making accurate one-handed shots with weaponry far more cubersome than a deagle.

Not saying it's not entirely optimal compared to using them on their own, but it can be made to work.

YOu make to adjourn the meeting, but before you do, you couldn't help but ask just one last question. Namely, is there any hope of getting out of the Akashic Realm through another Akashic Point, in case the teleportation fucks up somehow? The Second's guarding one the biggest and most stable one, right? The...Ocularis Terrible Bus or something like that? So, on the off-chance that anyone gets left behind, can they make their way out by heading towards that particular Akashic Point?

"Ocularis Terribus, Matsuda. You can call it the Eye of Terror if Latin is proving too much for you." Your Incubator replies, before tilting his head to the side in thought. "And...well, I suppose it's not impossible, to exit the Akashic Realm from a different Point than where you entered it into. However, I must stress that attempts to map the Realm itself has proven to be an impossible undertaking. The landscape is always in flux and always shifting to its own whims, making any hope of navigation a forlorn one at best."

...So he's saying it can't work, then.

"I'm not saying it can't work, Matsuda." Kyuubey makes a noise of annoyed indulgence here, something that you haven't heard from him for quite a while now. "All I'm saying is that whoever attempts the feat itself will need quite a lot of luck to succeed. Luck to find the Eye of Terror itself, and luck to survive the many Witches infesting the Realm itself. And they are always hungry for prey."

Sounds like a fucking picnic, then. One that's starting to feel like a bad idea. But then again, if you were all about good ideas, then you wouldn't be here, would you?

Kyuubey blinks up at you. "Well, I'm not blind to your concern, Matsuda, nor am I without imagination. I'll see what I can do about a contingency, worry not."

"Aw, don't worry, Murderface!" Kyoko pipes up. "Yuma-chan's not gonna let us down, she'll get us out of there the moment we tell her to and not a moment longer! Believe it!"

...Yeah. Sure. Why not.

"That's the spirit!"

You adjourn the meeting here, with Midori being asked to stay in Kyuubey's Office - most likely to get started on getting her acquainted with the communications array or whatever it is. You leave after Sayaka and Kyoko, with Wendy murmuring something as she passes you by:

"At least your new girlfriend's growing a pair of balls, Kong."

Cute. You'd made to snap something back, but Mami had ushered Wendy away, chastising her all the while.

Well. Anyway.

You decide to go to your personal vault first. Might as well - after all, your entire plan to save Oriko hinges on Kirika being able to talk some sense into the girl before you're forced to put her down for good.

...How Kirika'll manage that, seeing as she's currently a ghost trapped inside a fucking Golden Weapon, you're not too sure about - but if your last meeting with the former Eversor Rank Leader was any indication, it seemed like she had a plan. A plan that she didn't exactly elaborate on, but one that she looked and sounded sure about. A plan that you decided to gamble everything on, now that you think back on it.

...Well, whatever. So long as there's a chance for it to work, you'll try it, even if it seems like it's got fuck-all of a chance. At the very least, you'd have tried everything, and Kirika wouldn't be able to say you didn't.

The familiar chill of your vault turns your breath into a visible mist as the thick metal doors slam shut behind you - leaving you alone in the space where you stored the weapons made from a crazed goddess' broken soul.

You glance of them each in turn. The XI Golden Weapons - the gauntlets that contained Kotarou Yuu, shining brightly from their inset from where you'd placed them yesterday.

The XV Golden Weapons - the brutally-oversized chainaxes that contained Risa, former Warmaster of the Sixth. Still in their rack, just as you'd left them. They look normal, or as normal as giant metal axes with motorized chainteeth could be.

The VII Golden Weapon - your personal Desert Eagle, sleeping inside your shoulder holster, as always. You don't even leave it in the vault anymore. It's with you nearly all the time, and you feel strangely hollow and naked without its cold, comfortable weight against your side.

Finally, the XX Golden Weapon. Muramasa. The katana containing Kirika Kure, former Eversor Rank Leader of the Ninth, and all-around bitch psychopath. Tried to kill you a handful of times, and had very nearly succeeded that one time until a sniper you installed from a neighboring skyscraper reduced her to hamburger in one shot. But not after you yourself stunned her long enough to keep still long enough for the shot to take, and that was with a combat knife shoved right into her spine.

Out of all the Golden Weapons currently in your collection, it's always been the menacing one, even more than the chainaxes. Even if it was simply on its rack, the blade concealed inside its gilded ebony sheath, the katana never failed to exhude a killing intent that dwarfed even Gorefather and Gorechild's obvious, ravenous hunger.

Christ. Even in death, Kirika is still such a bitch.

What do you do now?

[]Pick Kirika up and leave. No time to waste here.

You narrow your eyes at Muramasa, before carefully reaching up and taking it off its rack. Carefully holding the weapon by the lovingly-carved ebony sheath it slept in. ...Surprisingly, instead of the flood of bloodthirsty anger that you were expecting to wash over you the moment you touched the blade, all you felt was calm. A resigned, accepting calm, as if Kirika herself was exerting effort to be on her best behavior. To appear harmless and actually viable for use, even to your own sharply-suspicious self.

...Well, she does have a reason for doing so, at least, so it's not THAT suspicious. But at the same time, you can't help but feel that even if the Eversor has something to gain by cooperating, she'll be looking for a chance to get back at you still. Some habits died hard, and for Kirika, holding grudges wasn't just a habit, it was a fucking hobby.

You rest the sheathed katana over your shoulder and make to leave your vault, but something stops you. Namely, the two Golden Weapons you're about to leave behind. You haven't been able to talk to the spirits inside them lately, so this would be a nice opportunity to just check up on them before you go. So you take the time to.

Yuu was her usual cheerful self, the Golden Bracelets immediately warming up as you brushed your fingers over their polished surfaces. Her voice blossoming breathlessly in your mind, she quickly told you that she'd been practicing all this time, trying to get better as well as remember a few of her especially-nasty punching techniques - and how she couldn't wait to show you at the earliest possible time.

You detected a hint of jealousy as she asked about the Golden Weapon you were carrying - namely, Muramasa - but it seemed that the young girl understood perfectly why you were bringing Kirika along instead of her, sounding completely sanguine about the entire thing when you tried to explain.

"It's fine, Chiaki-san. We are weapons made to be used, after all. I'm already happy with this much, and I can't ask for anything more." She grins brightly up at you. "But, please don't hesitate to call on me if you ever need to pulverize your enemies to dust!"

Risa seemed less accepting of that, however. She woke up amicably enough, greeting you with a sleepy, slurred salutation - one that turned into a nigh-unintelligible curse when you told her where you were going, and which Weapon you're taking with you.'

"Alright, alright, fine, I get if ya wanna bring yer pistol along. It's you, yeah? Bang bang, pew pew, makes ya think of yer dad's dick, I get all that." Her manifestation's permanent skull-grin is completely at odds with the expression of complete and utter confusion contorting her features. "But bringin' that slag with ya? That's just askin' for trouble, mate! Bring me along instead!"

The chainaxes begin to shake and rattle in their racks, seemingly in sympathy to the tantrum Risa is throwing. "I tore that biddy apart, up in that ruined tower! My teeth what chewed her neck right through in one fuckin' chop, not that silly little butterknife! Ya need me to win!"

How do you respond?

[]I promised, Risa. I'll take you along next time someone else needs to die.

You shake your head. You promised Kirika, you tell the wolf-eared phantasm. And besides, you're looking to bring Oriko back in one piece.

"But she'll still be in one--" Risa tries, holding up a finger for emphasis. You shake your head again.

In one piece, you repeat. That means with her head still attached to the rest of her body.

Silence, before the white-haired girl finally throws up her hands in frustration. "Fine. FINE! Go ahead and kill yourself divin' into the world's arsehole with nothing but a pretty gun an' a knife that looks more fit to be used parin' apples. See if I care!"

Risa then turns away from you here, her arms crossing over her chest, huffing petulantly. "More eyeballs in yer head than sense! And t'think I was gonna give ya a points multiplier for takin' me along, hah, see if I'll ever be that generous ever again, ya tosser!"

...You'll take her with you the next time someone - or everyone - needs to die, you tell her, trying not to smile too much at the interesting way her own brutal accent mangled angry Japanese. And what's a points multiplier? Is it something like what you see in videogames, or...?

"Yeah, just like that," Risa nods grudgingly. "See, we're not exactly accruin' points as fast as I'd like, so I thought special occasions like this could allow for multipliers and all. Incentive, that kinda thing."

Well. You'll keep it mind next time. It's just important that--

"--That everyone includin' the bint that started all this gets back home safe an' sound. Ya don't need to justify your decision to me twice, hero complex." Risa shakes her head. "Just...ya know. You're always wantin' to save everyone, and you know one time or another that it's gonna be impossible, right? You can't save everyone no matter what ya do. Someone else always gotta die no matter what you do." She points one clawed finger at you. "And it's gonna bite you back in the ass hard when you forget that.

"Good luck on the op, an' don't talk to any strange birds." Risa's wolf-ears twitch once before she disappears altogether, fading in the chilly air. Leaving you completely alone in your vault, and in your thoughts.

Can't save everyone, huh?

You shake your own head as you leave your vault, the spirit's words echoing inside your skull and Muramasa resting against your shoulder. ...You'd stuff the sword in your inventory, sure, but at the moment it feels comfortable to just carry it like this. As if you were meant to hold it this way all along.

Maybe you can ask Sayaka for a belt harness for this, or something. Something that'll let you carry this on your hip, or on your back. Or maybe even a sheath like hers, the one with the AR-15 welded to it. You're probably going to rip your arm off trying to use something like that properly, but hell, it'll be worth it.

With Muramasa now in your possession, you drop by Tiny Pete's repair bay next. It's another grueling walk, and when you do get there, you can hear what seems to be a heated argument between two kids. Entering the bay itself, you realize that it had only been Rea and Misaka, the two smeared from head to toe with grease and engine oil, brandishing tools at each other as well as indecipherable technobabble. Tiny Pete is on his rack, still in the middle of repairs - but he looks much better than how you've last seen him, at least, no longer looking like the half-melted demon stomping forward to take your soul.

It's also here that you see someone else working on Tiny Pete, her form crouched in front of the towering behemoth as she worked a tool on his skull-encrusted knee-armor. She looks normal enough from the looks of it, but there's something off about her that you can't pinpoint.

...You want to say it's her futuristic-looking costume, a sort of skirt-and vest number with glowing bits here and there, but somehow it wasn't even that. It was in the way she moved...

"MURDERFACE!" Misaka's shriek of joy as you step forward into the repair bay proper fills the entire room - and the little russian would've made a direct beeline to you had Rea not pulled her back in time.

"U-uwah! Hey, let go! Misaka needs to greet Big Sister Murderface!"

"You're filthy," Rea says in her usual monotone. "Both of us are. You'll mess her costume up."

"...N-nnh...Misaka...Misaka guesses so..." The Russian glares at Rea for a moment, a glare that your Vindicare Rank Leader is all too happy to return - before she turns back to you, eyes wet. "U-um, well, Misaka can give greeting hug anytime! Why is Big Sister Murderface here?"

How do you react?

Before you answer your arms dealer's question, you give her a pat on the head first - one that seems to immediately eradicate any and all trace of her black mood from earlier.

She beams up at you with a face stained with soot, engine oil and grease - the effect only adding to the Russian's bright and sunny smile instead of taking away from it. Making you wonder once more just what are you doing right to warrant someone like Misaka to look at you like you're Santa Claus, instead of...well, anything else, just not this. You're much used to being glared at, or being looked down upon.

You shake your head at this phenomenon, somehow managing to miss the look of utter jealousy that Rea herself shoots at your arms dealer - and it's here that you ask the two of them about Tiny Pete's repairs. How is it going?

"Tiny Pete is 99% functional!" Misaka punches the air with both fists in prideful triumph. "Misaka was having to nearly replace all major servos and all false muscle cabling, but with hard work, dedication and being best everywhere forever, Misaka has fixed Tiny Pete!" Rea clears her throat at this, obviously annoyed, but Misaka continues as if she hadn't heard. "Only finishing superficial repairs and rearmament now, and then Tiny Pete will walk again!"

You give Misaka one of your smiles, and pat her head again, thanking her for her hard work. Making the arms dealer squeal in the untold pleasure of validation - as well as make your Vindicare Rank Leader quietly seethe.

"Of course, Misaka leaves out the fact that the representative of the Fourth helped contributed immensely to Tiny Pete's repairs," Rea murmurs, looking up at you pointedly, as well as ignoring the Russian's now hate-filled glare aimed at her. The bespectacled Vindicare then gestures towards the strange girl still hurriedly working on Tiny Pete's knee armor - the girl you were just going to ask them about, too.

So...she's from the Fourth, then?

Rea nods. "I apologize for her behalf if she hasn't broken away to salute you, Warmaster. Magical Girls from the Fourth Officio are...different from us." She salutes you a moment later, as if just now remembering it. You smile at her dryly, before returning it in short order.

Well, you can certainly understand it if she's from an Officio with a completely different culture, but...you had the impression that saluting to a Warmaster was really a general kind of thing.

"It is a general thing, Warmaster, but...well." Rea seems to hesitate here, before something hardens in her eyes and she turns towards the girl. "Miss Barbara?"

Rea didn't even need to shout - her murmured call echoed across the otherwise empty and cavernous repair bay - but it seemed that 'Barbara' heard it just fine, the girl quickly rising to her feet and walking towards you. Immediately you spot her eyes from underneath her fringe of severely-cut black hair - and you're struck by how they seemed to glow brightly from within, in soft pulsing waves. So strikingly similar to how Kirishima Ruri's own eyes glowed, back in the dimly-lit darkness of the hotel room.

As she came closer, it's also here that you realize just why she looked strange, even from a distance.

She's a robot. An honest-to-goodness robot Magical Girl.

Covered from head to toe in metal, with certain parts of her body obscured by what looked to be armored plates or protrusions, such as her chest, head, shoulders, and hips. The ensemble forming metal imitations of a long, straight hairstyle and a blouse-and-skirt combination. The plates and protrusions were painted a soft baby blue, while the rest of her was a bright alabaster.

And her face...well. Her face, like the rest of her body, was metal, consisted of a pair of blue eye-lenses and barely-defined features resembling that of a blank fashion mannequin. Lines where the joints of her body lay were stark against the slim, clearly-feminine white alloy body.

"Greetings, Warmaster Chiaki Matsuda." She smiles at you, the expression much more genuine, much more real than your practiced one would ever be. Her voice full and warm and human, and oddly comforting. "I am Barbara Falko, of the Fourth Officio Assassinorum. Please allow me to congratulate you on your recent Ratification."

She bows here, bending at the waist, deep and crisp and graceful. Not even a single whirr of servos, just silence.

You can't help but look in awe. Rea and Misaka on the other hand, can't seem to help frowning at the display.

You return the bow yourself, feeling your own lower back twinge at the unfamiliar movement - and it's here that Barbara continues. "Forgive my appearance, Warmaster Matsuda. I was assisting with repairs to the Indomitus prototype, and I have not had the opportunity to...freshen up for this unexpected pleasure."

...The Indomitus prototype?

Misaka rolls her eyes, more at Barbara's insistence at the term rather than at your confusion. "She means Tiny Pete, Big Sister Murderface," she adds helpfully.

Human Resources 5: The Rabbit And The Snake

It was about midnight – I had some loose ends to tie up, and nothing in particular to do at home – when I came back into the office and found him there. Sitting on the windowsill, an opening to something that seems halfway real rather than the strange room around us, staring off into the distance. Well, no, not quite the distance, nothing so vague. He was staring at the QB Heavy offices like his eyes were glued to it. Wish I could say there was some kind of look or the other on his face, but there never is; he's about the only one here that I can't read.

I wouldn't pay much attention to this ordinarily, especially when I'm just reporting in before I head home, but he was there six hours ago, too. I couldn't quite tell if he moved.

“Something bothering you, Petey?” Sure, he had enough reasons, but he never seemed to mind. It was weird, seeing him acting like this.

“I am well, Miss Ryouno. Please go about your business. You are dismissed for today.” Well, that was pretty wooden even for him. ...Don't know why I stuck around. Curiosity at that point, I guess.

“Is that why you've been staring at a tower for the last six hours?” That got him a bit, I think. Little flick of the ear, and he just sort of... sagged a little, like any sort of breath or effort went right out of him.

“...Would you care to hear a story, Ryouno?”

“A story? I didn't know you told those. What's it about, then?”

“The parable of the rabbit and the snake. Have you heard it before?”

“...No, not that I remember. Go on.” So there I was, taking a seat next to an incubator in the middle of the night so he can tell me a story. At least it got him off the windowsill, even if he did sneak a glance at the tower now and then.

There were once two snakes, who found themselves hungry. Food had become scarce, and the land barren. Without a new source to feed upon, not only would they starve, but countless others might as well. This would not do, and so they set out in search of greener pastures. One – we will refer to him, for simplicity, as the Scaleless – stumbled, or slithered, upon the discovery that would one day save him. It had been a long journey from his home, but one that had been worth the arduous travel.

For you see, the Scaleless had found a rabbit burrow.

He would need to exercise caution, of course, lest he deplete their numbers. He would need to employ a disguise, lest he frighten the rabbits. So it was that he lived among them, always at the mouth of the burrow, mixing sweet gifts and bitter poison in his daily offerings to them. The rabbits prospered and, at times, dwindled for the sake of the serpent they carried within their ranks. Their lives had gone on to save those of others, and the Scaleless thought that this was well.

Years passed, and the snake went unknown through their numbers all this time. Perhaps they had never noticed that he was not a rabbit, or they simply did not care. Could the Scaleless himself remember that he was a snake, when the only reminder came from the venom that leaked from his fangs ever so rarely?

Happily, he was not left alone with their kind forever.

When the Earth had spun around the sun one time too many, the second snake arrived at long last, finding by chance the very same burrow. The Scaleless was elated, finally finding one of his kind to join him in this curious, almost maddening isolation, solitude among a crowd. The one who had shed his scales for a coat of fur was only too happy to help, to the newcomer's surprise and bewilderment. Why? Was it for their mutual mission, perhaps, or some sort of agenda? No, no, nothing of the sort.

[2/6]

>>35875608

You see, helping him to find his place brought the Scaleless joy in itself, because the snake was his brother, from the very same burrow. Why, it must have seemed very strange indeed to the snake back then – those that slither know neither family nor friends, after all – but he did not show this, for a snake can neither smile nor frown, only stare and watch. How curious and mad the Scaleless must have sounded then, lurking at the edge of the burrow and playing the part of his own prey.

In time, the newcomer had learned to adjust, and was even thankful for the help he had been given. For a while, the two serpents were happy in each other's company, brothers that were never meant to be. The Scaleless heard his brother's voice from before him, at first, baffled by the role he had chosen for himself. Happily, one day, they came to an understanding, and began to speak side by side. Perhaps the Scaleless had already poisoned his brother then? Or had the rabbits done so themselves, however unkowingly? He would never learn the answer.

One day, he heard the voice from behind himself instead. He thought nothing of it for one day, then another, until finally he thought to look around; he might have done so sooner, but he already had an inkling of what he might find, and dared not turn his head.

Behind him sat his brother, but not as he once was. Where the Scaleless had only ever lain at the door of the burrow, his brother was within the burrow, further below: A snake no longer, but a rabbit in full. Had he even noticed the change, this poor, maddened creature? No, perhaps not, as even the Scaleless had not seen it himself. They traded glances then, the Scaleless and the rabbit. The rabbit did not know that anything was amiss, for it is in a rabbit's nature to know nothing that would discomfit it. The once-snake saw his brother's eyes, then, and knew that they had gone mad. They could never return home again; the scaleless serpent could only do his best to hang onto a few scraps of memory for both their sakes.

Today, the rabbit, prosperous beyond measure, looks at the snake and sees a brother. The snake watches the rabbit, hoping to find someone he can remember, and sees only his own future in those beady red eyes.

And that is the end of their tale.

“The moral of the story is...” he stops then, not quite sure how to finish. I'm not used to seeing him hesitate. “Is... no. I am still an incubator, Ryouno, or so I wish to believe. We are skilled in neither parables nor morals.”

It's funny, in a way, how long you can know someone for and still learn something new out of nowhere. Maybe that's what he was thinking, too. ...Wasn't all that subtle even when he tried this hard, though.

“So that's how-” he cuts me off before I can say anything. Sounds the same as ever, even through this.

“...Purely allegorical. A story I heard once in the past. It is, as they say, a tale. Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, signifying nothing.” If that's what he wants to think, I'm not about to stop him. I won't get it until he gives the green light.

“I've heard it before, you know. The way you go on about the 'corruption' in other incubators. Is that what happened to Kyubey?” He's quiet for a while; either he's trying to think, or he doesn't want to say anything. I can never tell.

“He is still my dear brother,” the rabbit answers eventually – or is that the snake again, by now? “I would trust him with my life, and those of each and every person in this Officio.” ...Yeah, I guess that's how it goes. We choose some funny company, when we think it might give us someone to talk to. Someone to trust.

“What will you do when you retire?” Huh. I wasn't... I didn't quite see that coming, got to hand it to him. It's not a hard question, though. I always planned to get out of this eventually, buy my way into film or something. Maybe theatre, that's got a nice, classy sort of edge to it. It was always the plan, even if I'm less than sure that it'll work out, some days. Made me wonder, somehow, if he's worried about the day I walk out.

“You? I mean... if you ever let yourself take a break.” It was a bit of a stupid question, one of those 'you too' moments. Not like he was ever going to do anything else. He took it pretty seriously, though, like he did with everything else. Maybe that's what made him the sane incubator, or one of the last to snap, as far as they're concerned.

“I'm afraid I can't imagine the alternatives. I will have to answer some other time.”

Caught him staring out the window again. Have to say, I was impressed, in a way. Didn't expect him to make up a story on the spot, even if that's... probably a bad sign for him, huh. He tried his best, though; maybe in too many directions at once. Not that I could really understand. How can I? It's hard enough wrapping my head around how he thinks at the best of times, never mind when he starts worrying about turning as crazy as the rest of us. About losing his brother – one he never had in the first place - to us.

I notice myself wondering, after a bit, about what he's going to do now. Takes me a little too long, thinking back, to piece it together. He'd look for someone like him, I guess. Someone who can... sort of meet him halfway, even if neither quite gets the other. A good match for a half-snapped incubator, not quite as normal as they come, but not as far gone as the others. And there's only one other incubator in Mitakihara. You'd think nothing could replace that.

...Guess that explains a thing or two. Not sure how I feel about that. Maybe I should be flattered, or worried.

“Sanbey?”

Nothing. I put a hand on one of the rabbit's ears - or the snake, I'll figure that out when he makes up his mind - in case that gets his attention.

“Hey, Peter?”

“Yes?”

“You mind if I stay here a little longer?”

“Please.”

...Done stranger things, for stranger people.

The radio blares with a periodic mind drilling tone triggering my snooze button reflex. Six o'clock, time to begin another day in hell.

Exactly seven minutes later, I slap the snooze button again, and again seven minutes after that. Twenty-one minutes after six, I give up wishing the sun would do the courtesy of exploding and decide to turn off the alarm proper.

I blindly grope for the light switch almost knocking the lamp off the night stand in the process. The lamp clicks twice, and after a delay, the fluorescent bulb floods the room with light. I struggle against my grogginess pulling myself out of bed, and meander out of my bedroom into the shower for a quick rinse.

I step out after a couple minutes and begin drying my hair. It's a chore to maintain. I only haven't cut it all off because I like the way it shines. Black, smooth and shoulder length, I'm proud of it, which I think is a bit odd considering I put almost no effort into how I look. I rub the crust from my emerald eyes and give myself a quick spot check. My skin is a darker tint of brown than I like; I've been spending more time outside in the sun burning to a crisp. At least it's smooth and soft; the bruises and lacerations are all but fully healed.

I grumble an inaudible greeting to myself and amble across the hall into the hallway closet for some clothes. It takes me all of three seconds to pluck a random selection of thrift store salvage to carry back to my room. Blue jeans bearing a few holes here and there and a black t-shirt with only the word "Berlin" on the front, no accessories. I stand in front of my mirror lazily changing clothes and combing my hair going over today's todo list.

Callidus exam. A makeup for failing the first two times. I'm not especially bad at the task itself, but the problem lies in my handicap. It's not so hard for everyone else, but just me thanks to my unusually low magic capacity.

At two o-clock, I have an appointment with the rank leader. No doubt about my less than exemplary performance, or claiming an excessive amount of sick days. Not looking forward to that; all the more reason to give it my all for the exam, might make a good impression for when I need to grovel later. I grab a stale week old doughnut and a bottle of orange juice and head out for the Officio headquarters in downtown Morpork after donning my gray jacket.

Morpork, Virginia, economic hub at the mouth of the Chesapeake Bay where land and rail meet the bulk of the ocean and ship trade for the eastern half of the country. Home of the world's largest naval base. When I contracted to the Eighth, I got the rundown of how things worked while being told the cover story about my sudden permanent change of residence that should be conveyed to my parents.

I've been scouted and hired by Lockseed Martian to work as a technology researcher to help protect our freedoms or some bull. Free room and board plus scholarship. Sure, whatever.

>> ☐ Udonge 10/31/14(Fri)16:16:04 No.35875741

Lockseed is a subsidiary of the Eighth, just one of many used to exert a startlingly well covered up influence on the government and global trade. Sometimes I daydream about what it would be like to actually work there, researching unique innovative ways to make 120 million dollar titanium flying dildos into 150 million dollar titanium flying dildos. It helps stave off the thoughts of suicide at least.

I slip into the MacAaron Parking Garage, the largest car park in the city, in the heart of the shopping district. It's surrounded by boutiques, restaurants, outlets and the MacAaron Shopping Mall filled with more of the same. Inside is mostly quiet and empty save for a single car starting its engine on the floor above. The ground is spotless with fresh clean painted lines, the signage is kept new and free of vandalism, and the interior is well lit. Not a single light bulb is burnt out and the pavement is free of blemishes; the lanes are clearly marked, and the garage is large enough to warrant its own traffic lights on the inside.

I walk into the nearest elevator, press my ID card against an unmarked section of smooth metal plate near the buttons and wait for the panel to blink once. I then press the G button and the elevator closes its doors and greets me in a crystal clear female voice with a British accent harmonized with a tune played by an orchestra. It's played through several hidden speakers mounted in every direction, above and below, all subtly changing their phase to make it sound like the center of the sound is constantly moving around my head. It's almost therapeutic in a way, but also completely overkill for a freaking elevator.

>> ☐ Udonge 10/31/14(Fri)16:17:23 No.35875758

The elevator doors open to a vestibule furnished with Persian carpet, sofas, and coffee tables stacked with Magical Girl Weekly, Teen Rogue, Timeline, Popular Magic and other magazines I see girls reading at times. Maybe I'll actually get around to skimming through one someday. I can see through the glass panes opposite the elevators that the corridors are populated by only a few girls going about their business. I pace down the clean white tile hallway stepping carefully with my worn sneakers to reduce the noise I make. Mostly out of long standing habit, I tread while making the smallest noise possible, avoiding eye contact with others lest I attract unnecessary attention.

Following the route to the C terminal tram, I keep up the effort to remain inconspicuous throughout my trip, the habit reinforced thanks to previous run-ins with some of the more...special magical girls. It's not uncommon to bump into a girl who's an entire dump truck of fries short of a happy meal but has the raw power to cleave a battleship in two. I'd like to not have a repeat of the last few times I became the stress ball for an eversor's frustrations. Some of the venenums in the medical ward are on a first name basis with me.

Walking through the Officio puts me on edge; I think they can smell my weakness in the air. Must flip a switch somewhere in their mind, igniting their assassin instincts or something. Luckily, the few girls in the building at this hour are minding their own business, and make it to the tram without incident, it's just as peaceful in the tram as it was in the hallways. The automatic doors shut, and I ease into a seat letting go of my tension. The tram jerks forward starting its journey as I slouch down into my seat with a long sigh, like letting the air out of an inflatable mascot.

I pull out my soul gem as the sound system in the tram plays back a greeting on the same level of unneeded over the top luxuriance as in the elevator. The gem shines weakly with a pale blue light emanating from the center like a cell phone at the bottom of a deep murky pool. Removing from my inventory the same grief seed I've been using this past week, I tap it to my soul gem. I can't tell, but I think it looks less drab and dreary, the light shining a little brighter than before.

Where did it all go wrong? How did I go from ordinary middle schooler with no friends and a minor bullying problem to barely magical girl with no friends and a periodically lethal bullying problem? What happened to that grand master plan, the "perfect wish"? I just had to get arrogant, had to be a big shot, had to fall for 8ball's shit hook line and sinker. My head rests on the back of my seat while I reflect.

I plan ahead for everything: every event, every twist and turn a situation can take, and every chance happening down to the nitty gritty details. I'm prepared for anything, no matter how outlandish or improbable, and I've worked out the appropriate action to take ensuring I come out on top and ahead of the game, or so I like to think.

On that day that the mutant cat-weasel-rabbit approached me, in my head, I believed I had solved the "one wish" proposition eons ago; without even having to resort to loop holing wordplay that amounts to asking for more wishes. It was literally child's play. Spending most of my childhood avoiding all human contact to be alone in my little world gives me a lot of time to think about these things.

The perfect wish was supposed to give me everything I wanted out of the universe, and - and I thought I was sooo clever and wise beyond my years here - conveniently and automatically leave out the things I only thought I wanted but didn't, and give me the things I didn't know I wanted or would want in the future. Could have lifted the Hindenburg with all of the smug I was releasing.

I'm still not completely sure what 8ball thought as I recited my wish. For all his boisterousness and rather rude mannerisms and painful stereotyping, he sure fell silent when I uttered the words that would enslave my soul:

"I wish to be able to wish for nothing." This, very quickly followed by what I can only guess was about 40 minutes of unbroken speech detailing what amounted to my Terms and Conditions, an amalgamation of my best constructed and memorized legalese, was my wish. Plugging every loophole, contradicting every alternative interpretation, breaking down every word with an improvised Socratic method, I covered and filled the philosophical nooks and crannies. I assumed that I was making a contract with the devil (about the only thing I did right), and I wasn't going to leave any room to get screwed over.

I was rewarded with -this-. I roll the gem around in my hand, my mind silent for a moment or two before I re-materialized the gem as a ring on my finger. The tram cruises along transitioning from underground to an elevated above ground section of rail that joins with the main loop. Sunlight peeks over the horizon illuminating the eastern half of the cloudless sky.

It took a while to fully sink in initially. The depth of what I had done to myself, the hell that was to become my every day life, and the complete lack of power I had in more ways than one. It probably hit me finally when I died for the first time. Bright idea at the time thinking that if I stood up for myself for once in my life, I'd earn respect and never have to deal with bullying again. Bright idea as a callidus with an abnormally limited magic capacity to think she could stand up to an eversor.

I remember dying slowly and painfully, then waking up in the medical bed brought back to life but all the pain still there. I remember crying myself to sleep then; I can't remember the last time I cried before that if I ever did. I'll always remember that day that I died, cried, and, also for the first time I can ever remember, just wanting a friend to talk to.

The tram comes to a stop at the ever so creatively named Commercial Office District station. I exit the station, and head across the street toward the business park. Unlike the shopping district, the office district isn't stuffed with billboards, flashy signs, and casually dressed people carrying shopping bags and wielding smart phones like they would die if they didn't keep hammering at the screen with their thumbs a hundred times a second. Even off duty magical girls hold their electronic narcotics closer to them and care for them more than their own soul gems.

Here, there's altogether less visual clutter; just plain office buildings with the accompanying logos and sidewalks lined with dogwood trees in between LED streetlights. The people, while also glued to their thousand dollar watch replacements, are dressed professionally in suits and ties, mostly middle aged men with fewer women and even fewer young interns, and talk rather loudly when on the phone. Fooling only themselves, they want to convince the word that they are important and necessary, and the best way to do that is to talk business loudly in public. They make mundane every day conversations about recent transactions sound like industry changing fortune 500 business deals, and it hinges on their word. Then they end the call conveniently in front of their favorite bar and drink themselves into a stupor in time just before the crushing truth has a chance to swoop in.

Then again, it might not be too far from the truth. The buildings surrounding the one in the center are owned by puppet corps of the 8th. At least they get to be part of the fun when we pull on the strings.

The center building, surrounded in a glass curtain wall, is the main center of operations for the callidus. There isn't that much to be said about the place; it's mainly offices where paper work and data entry get done. Below the surface is a data center, and below that are silent rooms, vaults, and other things I can imagine but don't have the access to know for sure.

I proceed through the main entrance where I'm immediately greeted by Alyssa Lockhart, callidus rank leader. She's wearing a button up short sleeve white shirt, red tie, and blue skirt that comes down to her knees. She flips her long light-purple hair that makes her ample bosom non-verbally and confidently announce its presence, and grabs a tablet off the front desk.

"Serina Hunter," she addresses me in a calm, business-like voice. I return the greeting with a stiff salute. "Good morning. You're early, as expected." She taps a few times on the tablet before handing a manila folder to the front desk secretary. "Grab my bags for me and follow me. I'll be driving you to the exam as I have a few special things I need to talk with you about before you begin." I picked up the bags sitting beside the front desk next to her, one a large purse, and the other a normal beige bag baring the numerals VIII in large golden stitching.

Normally, for the exam, we just show up at the starting point at the specified time, but I had written orders to come to the office in person. What she has to tell me must be so important that she couldn't wait to tell me at our scheduled meeting later today. My pay has already been sequestered down to the minimum allowed by Officio policy for my many sick days and medical resource usage. I idly wonder what else can be taken away before stopping myself from thinking into it any further. No point in worrying.

I place her bags in the back seat of one of the generic white company sedans. It's some late model something something with a license plate that reads CURVIII. I hop into the passenger seat as Alyssa starts the car and we pull out of the lot. The car soon fills with the pleasant scent of her fruity shampoo. Before I can enjoy it too much, she breaks the silence as soon as we are on the road.

"Did you eat anything for breakfast?" Her question caught me a bit off guard, I'd expected her to drill into me straight away. I guess she's not as straight to business as I thought.

"Doughnut." I reply in a tone as stale and colorless as the nearly rock hard confectionery that was my breakfast.

"Look in my bag and grab the pink box on top," she offers in a softer warm voice. I reach back and pull out the box from the bag and into my lap. It's a pastry from Sweet Treats, a popular family run bakery in the shopping district. Opening the box revealed a surprise that made me forget whatever it was I was worried about just a minute ago. Two fresh sweet potato jacks in all their golden glory. The pastry of the gods. I stare at it in stunned silence before murmuring a thanks and taking a bite.

Alyssa says something about me needing to eat a proper breakfast that I can't hear over the harps played by angels. The soft exterior mixes with the warm smooth sweet potato filling and gracing my tongue with the divine blessing of righteous sweetness. Soon, every square centimeter of my mouth is covered in starchy goodness and every swallow brings with it a soothing and satisfying essence of revitalization that slides down into my stomach warming my body with the love and care that I know the baker put into it. I don't even notice the tears streaming don my face until it's pointed out to me.

The callidus rank leader is at a loss for words when she hands me a handkerchief. I finish off the last of the jacks and dab my tears slightly embarrassed of myself. I haven't had a sweet potato jack in years, and those were too perfect; it takes a moment for me to compose myself, resuming my usual deadpan expression. I make a mental note to go compliment the baker and maybe buy another one some day when I have more than twelve cents in pennies picked up off the ground in my inventory.

I clean up and awkwardly thank Alyssa a couple more times. She lets me enjoy the afterglow for a beat before bringing me crashing down from cloud nine back to reality.

"I've made some modifications to your exam. You will be taking this one alone this time and the difficulty has been increased to play to your strengths." She informs me back in her usual business groove. "The time limit has been reduced to four hours, and conditions have been added for passing and failing." I listen intently as she explains the changes to the exam relieved that this wasn't going to be a pre-haranguing.

The callidus exam consists of two major parts: clerical and field work. Clerical is easy enough, just don't have mush for brains cougheversorscough and anyone can pass. Field work is much more exciting: three parts with three to five callidus-in-training taking the exam at the same time, teamwork optional, against a squad of newly inducted vindicare and whoever else wants to volunteer to kick around some fresh meat, teamwork mandatory.

Despite my persistent failures, I'm actually looking forward to taking the exam. It's probably the only thing I've done that's actually been fun since contracting. Not only do I get to stretch my legs a little and get away from the constant threat of having my bones broken, but the exam is the only time I feel I have some control which I haven't felt in over a month. The rules are very straight forward and nonrestrictive allowing quite the freedom of approach. I think if I can just pass the damn thing and get real missions like these, I might just turn out to enjoy some part of my life again.

Alyssa asks me if I have any questions, which I don't; I never ask questions for fear they're going to figure out what I'm planning and plug that loophole. Then she fills the silence that would be the rest of the trip by plugging loopholes I've exploited in the past and trying to anticipate new ones with more stupid rules.

We pull up to a nondescript area off the beaten path which was off the highway in the middle of a forest. She takes my grief seed since they aren't permitted during the exam and offers a choice of firearms which I quickly refuse. My proficiency lies in stealth and having an over sized firecracker isn't my style; it won't help me at the truly difficult portion either.

"Your exam begins when you cross the red tape; good luck," she states. We exchange salutes, and she smirks a devilish smirk with a suspicious wink that is all too out of place for her normal formal front. A chill runs up my spine, and I wonder if I should take that as a sign that this isn't going to be an ordinary newbie exam or if she's just trying to get into my head.

I try to shake the feeling and forget the gesture while trodding through to the deeper part of the forest. My hands, either from the chill in the air or from anticipation, begin trembling; I clench them hard. I have to be quick to put some ideas into action, quicker still for the contingency plans to save my butt should I encounter some nasty surprises. I might...I thin- no, this may be my last chance to prove I'm worth something to the Officio. There's no room for failure, I CAN and WILL do this. I've planned for this.

Trials of the Thrice-Cursed

Chapter 1-3: Wildcards

I used to work for the Ninth, but now Fate apparently decided it would be funny to make it so I'd end up with their old enemy from the Third. It had been about a week now since the world went insane on me, but I've managed to adapt. Honestly? the ease I've had in doing so actually bothers me. I shouldn't be taking this so lightly. Everything I strived for, everyone I enjoyed and would die for. Even my loyal partner. Everything's been stripped away from me.

And I'm just calmly chilling with strangers who picked me off the streets. What the bloody fuck is wrong with me.

"So.. that's about it."Silke finished her explanation with a small confirming nod in emphasis. The two of us were sitting across the 'living room' part of the lounging area. She was sitting properly, if a little nervously, while I was lazily laying down on one of the couches, hands joined under my head as I listened.

"That's pretty interesting, actually." I found myself replying. " Explains a lot of things about how the Officio used to work and how their layout is designed." I hid a small yawn by turning my head away towards the seat of the couch for a few seconds; hadn't really slept in the past few days.

"Y-yes, it... got a little difficult at times.." I raised an eyebrow at her comment before letting out a small chuckle.

"Hey, no need to be all modest. We all have to deal with crap one way or another and I'm pretty sure I'd feel like shit if I was in your situation." The Culexus remained silent and looked away slightly.

She eventually managed to mutter a small "thank you" I could have missed if my senses weren't sharpened to high levels by the magic flowing through my blood. I just smiled and teased her a little.

"No coming too close though, I can only tolerate so many headaches in a day."

Silke let out a small 'hmf' and I just chuckled again.

"I can't help but wonder though.." The little Culexus picked up in a more confident tone than usual, it almost felt like she was just thinking out loud rather than addressing me directly. "Why are you affected this much."

"Hm?"

"No one else gets sick when my suit is set to maximum like this, but you still feel the effects, I wonder why."

I slowly picked myself up from my lazy laying down position and shifted up to a leisurely sitting position, resting my cheek on cold fleshmetal fingers in thought. It was a bit strange like she said. I never really spent time with Culexi back at the Ninth, so the question never really came up. It did mean I had to be even more careful if I was especially vulnerable to their attacks like she was implying. Already my mind started to race thinking of ways of how I could try to deal with this kind of situations.

"Actually, if you don't mind.." Silke perked up lightly at my words. "I'd appreciate if we could schedule some training at some point." she tilted her head slightly, even with the visor on I could tell she must have been looking at me like I was crazy - which is a perfectly valid thing to do, but that's beside the point. "Don't give me that, I'm serious."

There was a few seconds of silence followed by a small sigh. "..If you insist, then I'll see what I can do to help." Her vox-caster concealed the tone of her voice, but from the body language and pace, I could tell she wasn't all that happy with it.

There was an awkward moment for a while longer. She was clearly a bit uncomfortable, but for what reason I couldn't tell for sure. Could be bad previous experiences trying to do the same for all I knew. Either way I decided to drop the topic for the time being and stood up, heading to the kitchen section while stretching my arms a little.

"What are you up to?" she leaned forward from her seat as I started rummaging through the fridge and counters. I caught a glance of her fidgeting from the side of my eye. "Trying to pull my weight" I responded evenly as I kept searching.

The Culexus soon enough hopped down from her big chair and headed over, taking care to remain at least two meters off to my side. Still gave me a slight headache, but it was small enough for me not to care. "What are you looking for?" she asked simply, looking as if she wanted to help. "Alcohols. I used to work at a bar so I know all kinds of mixes."

Silke seemed to stiffen a little, I almost felt like she was going to try to sermon me or something - she looked young enough for that - but she didn't. "Suzume only buys wines." I stopped my search and leaned back slightly. That was a problem, I didn't know much of any recipe with those things. "It's not like you have to anyway... it's.. it's unhealthy you know..." Ah, there was a sermon after all, but she didn't look all that convinced by her own words.

"It helps relax. It's kind of like smoking cigarettes except instead of blowing the smoke into everyone's faces it's something you can keep to yourself."

Silke swayed a little on her tiptoes before giving another feeble-sounding rebuttal. "W-well, both are bad..."

I just shrugged and leaned against the counter. "Look, I can understand trying to be as good as you can be, but we all have to cope with a lot of stress and bullshit. Except if we let things fester instead of just having a small mental breakdown we turn into screeching monsters." A small gasp escaped her mouth, I soothed my own voice, trying to be comforting. "So it's all right. We can have a few vices to indulge in, it helps keeping us sane and functioning. 'Don't have to try to shoulder the whole world. "

The little Culexus sighed lightly and remained silent for a second or two before taking a few steps and reaching up to give me a pat on the head. I froze in place for a moment, completely at a loss as to how to react to something like that.

I knew shit was going to get awkward.

"You try to act all spooky and tough, but you're really a good girl inside." At this point I felt a little bit of red creep up to my cheeks; and it wasn't blood for once.

"The hell I am!" I finally growled out as she took a few steps back. "I don't "act" or any of that bullshit, I'm always me."

"I know." she simply answered, taking another step back to avoid a punch that never came. "I can tell."

I sighed deeply, trying to contain my exasperation. What the fuck was up with her all of a sudden? I grumbled lightly and took my bottle of vodka from my inventory, setting it down on the counter with a loud 'thud', which got a small tilting of the head out of her. "You're going to drink and you're going to like it."

"Hum, Tatsuki--"

"No buts, it's the price for making fun of me just now." I immediately cut her and she slumped slightly, probably resigned. "Now now, don't make that face, it's really good stuff I'm sharing with you here."

"What face?" she quickly protested a bit louder than her usual tone. "You can't even see my face behind this!"

I just shrugged as I started to pour two glasses of pure Russian goodness. "Relax." I let out calmly before picking up my own and sampling a small sip. All hail the Drink of Kings. "I'm not really going to force you." she sighed lightly and tiptoed again, hazarded a glance to the glass, then to me, then back to the glass.

When she finally decided to lift her visor, my headache exploded a few levels. I grit my teeth at the sudden pain but bore with it. I emptied the rest of my own glass in a quick gulp to help with it then reported my attention back on her.

Her face really did look innocent, no matter how much I looked. She had short blue hair and gentle green eyes. It's when I saw those eyes that I knew for sure; she wasn't meant to be a Magical Girl. They were eyes that made you feel like you wanted to protect them from all the horrors we can't run away from. But at the same time, they weren't completely naive. She had seen her share already; I could feel that much.

Silke cautiously took the glass I had offered her and gave it a look as if it was some sort of dangerous poison or radioactive material before slowly bringing it closer and eventually to her lips. It was kinda cute actually, especially with that face of hers. She took a tiny sip and blinked before shivering. "..warm.. it's cold, but then warm.." She looked down with a curious expression and took another, longer sip. She coughed lightly and tried to cover her mouth with a gloved hand.

"TATSUKI" another now-familiar voice suddenly roared behind me loud enough for me to turn around and take a stance. "What do you think you're doing with my little German!" Suzume was standing barely half a meter away from me, most likely having snuck in with one of her Callidus Tricks while I wasn't looking.

I let out a small chuckle and shrugged, trying to put on an innocent look of my own. I was probably failing badly though. There's no way I can ever be considered that anymore anyway.

The Callidus' expression softened a little and she put a hand on my shoulder. "Just teasing." she then leaned in closer and narrowed her eyes before adding in a whisper. "But if you try to get her drunk to take advantage of her I'll put you in a Barrier that'll make you beg it was a Witch's.~" I remained silent and blinked once with a neutral expression.

Silke blushed slightly as she stepped in "J-jeez Suzume I can take care of myself!" Yes she can, now if only she could avoid coming this close with her visor open I would appreciate. I get the feeling this stabbing pain in my gut is going to become nasty any moment now. I let out a small grunt and she seemed to realize, taking a step back and slamming her visor shut. A glance at her glass made me realize she had already downed it all. What?

"Well, I digress." Suzume leaned against the counter as well and brought a hand to her hair, adjusting it carefully like she seemed to always do. "I just met with one of my contacts and found us a little job." I gave her a small look. This time she wore a pretty regal cocktail dress of midnight blue with small purple styling and details. Looked about right for meeting with a client.

"So what's it going to be?" I crossed my arms and titled my head slightly in wonder.
"Escort duty." she responded with a hint of tease.
"Oh come on!" I objected with a roll of the eyes.
"For a cargo ship." she smirked and specified, leaving my interest renewed:
"Go on."

Suzume nodded and moved away from the counter, heading for her usual throne-like chair in the lounge."Long story short, a museum burned down and all the salvaged works are being transferred to a new exposition site. There's for entire billions' worth of art pieces in that ship on the black market."

"Classic, so they think pirates are going to try to intercept?" I headed over as well with Silke in tow before getting a seat myself.

"That's a bit of an understatement actually. The sponsors received an ultimatum by an unknown source that says unless the cargo surrender at a specific location and time, the entire crew is going to die and that no amount of security will be able to prevent that." Suzume explained calmly as she joined her hands.

"Now you're talking my language." I couldn't help but smirk. After all the crap I've went through lately I really needed an opportunity like this to unwind. "So we're expecting Officio opposition? Sounds like something the Tenth would do."

The ice-eyed Callidus nodded lightly. "No doubt, their ultimatum was very arrogantly written. They must have something they believe to be a trump card of sorts. That is why I'll be sending the two of you." she made eye contact with the both of us for emphasis. "Tatsuki, I trust you will be able to take on and defend against whatever they will be throwing at the client. You will be acting as lure while Silke finds and shuts down whatever it is they have up their sleeves."

"That sounds right up my alley." my smirk widened at the prospect of a last stand with unknown forces crashing down. For the first time in a week, I felt excitement again. "I'll show them why they used to call me the Phoenix of the Ninth." Suzume tilted her head with a small amount of confusion, most likely having never heard of any such title. It stung, hard, but I just put on a token smile and waved it off. "Nevermind."

"The data?" Silke asked flatly as she stood back up, soon answered by another nod from the Callidus. "I already added it in." The Culexus looked back to me and made a motion to tell me to come over as she walked to a side-room that held a lot of electronic material; surveillance equipment mostly.

I was honestly a little surprised when I saw just how well the little German handled all this equipment. When it comes to combat, it's not uncommon to hear people speak of how they see their weapons as extensions of themselves. That was roughly the feeling I was getting when I watched her. In no time flat she pulled up the exact location the ultimatum asked for, the sea charts for the vicinity, the weather conditions for the specified time, the itinerary of the cargo and its blueprints and specifications.

"Here, please review this." I blinked lightly at the Culexus and gave her a look. "It's all you'll need to know so.. please memorize it well!" I couldn't help but nod at the enthusiasm in her outburst. What a strange girl. I took a seat in front of all the monitors and started to check everything. I doubted I'd actually make use of all that intel, but there was time to spare.

Time that couldn't make me more eager for it to pass quickly.

Treasure Hunter Elaine

Chapter 3: Hedonism HQ

It was a long flight, but now I'm finally back in Rome, and on my way to the 14th. The sooner I get there, the sooner I can drop the sarcophagus off to Pius and contemplate ways to obsessively wash out my inventory. I don't care that's she in a sarcophagus, having a dead body in your inventory is gross as hell.

Tearing my thoughts away from what's in my inventory, I'm again floored by just how massive the building of the 14th Officio is. It's at least 400 feet tall, and it extends who knows how far underground. The building is about 600 feet in diameter at the surface, easily taking up four city blocks here in Rome. It's almost five times the size of the standard American unit of area: the football field.

From the outside the circular building has three levels visible, each level having a dozen small towers rising up a couple dozen feet. The entrance to the Officio is also massive, being at least 150 feet tall and looking like the front of a Roman cathedral. The entire Officio looked like it was cut from a single, absolutely massive block of stone. The outside was decorated with carvings, statues, and emblems made out of brass. Surrounding the Officio were 300 foot pillars of stone with brass statues of magical girls standing on top of them. The doors—

…You know what? Just take my word on it. The entire office building and everything on it is fucking massive and gaudier than the tomb I just got back from, and that was filled with gold and jewels. I'd even say the pyramid was subtle compared to the 14th. Point is, everything is shiny and impressive, and if I were to try and describe every detail of the building, I'd be here all day. The effort and energy needed to make this place is just mindboggling, I don't know how Pius made it and did it without anyone noticing, other than with some half-assed explanation like "Callidus hid it" or "alien space magic."

I open the doors and walk inside the Officio. I'll try to keep the descriptions brief this time.

The inside of the Officio is just as gaudy as the inside, but replace half of the bronze sculptures and carvings with gold, the other half with marble, and throw valuable paintings of the Blessed Lady on almost every wall. The hardwood floors are polished to the point of having a permanent sheen, and red velvet carpets and tapestries cover the floors and parts of the walls respectively. No, I don't know how the velvet remains in its perfect pristine state week after week of use, or how you never slip and fall on your ass with the velvet on polished hardwood floors, but that's the 14th for you.

Oh, hold on. I missed one rather important aspect of the fourteenth.

Most of the statues, paintings, and other artwork on the inside of the Officio that doesn't involve the Blessed Lady in some way are all of naked women. Whenever I walk by them I try not to pay attention to the statues, the lewd positions some of them are in, or how others look suspiciously similar to the Warmaster.

Yeah… it's… a fairly lewd Officio, and many of the girls in it are just about as lewd. At least they keep the worst statues inside the Officio and not display them on every available space on the outside of the Officio. Granted, Pius had to step in and enforce that himself.

Enough of that though. I think I should stop by Pius's office for now and drop off the crazy magical girl in my inventory.

Several lewd statues later, I find myself in front of Pius's office. Compared to the rest of the Officio, it's rather tame. It's just a door about twice my height, made of solid oak, and stained to look a deep, dark brown. Other than a few carvings of the Blessed Lady and a few words inscribed on the surface, "GAUDE PUELLA MAGI ", there are no other decorations on it to speak of.

Without hesitating I open the door to the incubator's office and walk inside.

Pius's office looked like the inside of a Christian church, except instead of in the shape of a cross the room was rectangular with a rounded wall opposite the door. The room itself did not have much light to speak of, only relying on the glow of several screens to give it a faint blue light. The room also lacked any pews, and instead just had a red carpet lead up to the altar, which Pius used as his desk. The altar cum desk was the same color as the door, but with certain parts gilded with the Officio's logo. Instead of murals and stained glass of Christ, the Saints, or any other holy figures you might find in a Christian church, there were about twenty electronic screens that currently had images of The Blessed Lady on them. That was Pius's screensaver so to speak. It flipped through a number of images of the Blessed Lady when he wasn't using the screens or his computer to contact his brothers.

Pius himself looked like most of his brothers. White fur, opposable ears, fluffy tail, the works. He's slightly taller than the other incubators, but not by all that much. What sets him apart from his brothers though is the miniature red gown that he wears, along with the large and rather silly pope hat sitting on his head. As far as I know, not one of the girls has ever seen him without the hat on. The few times that he's been killed he came back with a new pope hat already on his head.

When Pius herd the door open, he stopped what he was doing and looked up at me immediately. "Hoh? It's unusual to see you here. You've never accepted my invitations to meet me after your trips. I take it this means something happened in the tomb, Elaine." He says in his deep voice. Yes, a deep voice. Unlike the other incubators his voice isn't some sickeningly sweet high pitched noise, it's a deep, oily voice.

As for Pius himself, he often acts like a priest whenever he can, sans sermons. It's part of the reason why he doesn't mind if one of his girls barges right into his office like I just did. He'll drop everything to listen to our problems and try to offer solutions. Problem is, he's still an alien cat with the barest understanding of how humans work, so his help isn't all that useful or wanted most of the time. Often his help is even detrimental to us, to the point of needing a grief seed after seeing him.

From what little I know of the guy, when he came to earth God knows when, he was fascinated by the human concept of "religion" and wanted to spread one of his own. He never got a chance to spread his own, but he saw how many magical girls already worshiped the "Blessed Lady" and he set out to help spread the religion to magical girls worldwide along with his brother in the 2nd. He likes to see himself as the "pope" of the religion, even though there isn't a recognized pope for the Blessed Lady, and if he ever made any decrees about the religion no one ever listened to him. Girls often end up calling him a fake pope or fake priest behind his back because of that.

Anyway, back to the matter at hand about the girl in the tomb.

"Hey Pius, I hit a bit of a snag over in the pyramid in Egypt that I thought you should see." I tell him as I pull the sarcophagus out of my inventory and stand it up.

"Oh? Very well. This is the first time you've sought my assistance."

I pull the lid off and the girl from the pyramid falls out onto the floor.

"I found her in the tomb, and she claimed to be Cleopatra," I answered. "Or at least she sincerely believed she was Cleopatra."

Pius tilts his head bewildered, as if he was a confused puppy or something. I spend the next few moments filling him in on everything that happened in the tomb.

"I see… This is serious, indeed," Pius says as he hops down from his desk and starts examining the girl. "May I see her soul gem?"

I pull the sapphire soul gem out of my pocket. It's no longer crystal clear, but some darkness has begun to form in the gem. Probably because I kept her body and her soul apart for so long. I hand the soul gem over to Pius to examine. He probably would have easily caught it had I tossed it, but throwing souls is typically frowned upon. If anyone in the 14th can solve the mystery of where this girl came from and what she was doing in Egypt, it would be Pius.

"Hoh? Interesting." Pius mutters as he examines the soul gem with his… ears? Arms? Earms? Anyway, after a few moments he sets the soul gem down and looks up to me. "I am unable to determine when exactly she was contracted, or who the incubator that contracted her was, Elaine."

See? I told you he'd be able to—wait what?

"Nothing?" I ask surprised. "You don't have any idea who she is? No idea at all?"

"All I can tell about her contract from examining the soul gem is that she could have been contracted at any point in time between a million years ago and about a week ago." Pius continues. "I can tell you that she would be an Eversor, and she has a large amount of magic available to her, but I do not know the details of her powers or what her wish could have been."

"So what, are you trying to tell me that she could in fact be Cleopatra?" I asked incredulously.

"Of course not." Pius answers. "It's impossible that Cleopatra could have lived for two thousand years without us knowing about it. She would have fallen long before now had she actually been in the pyramid that long without a grief seed. What possessed you to think that she actually was Cleopatra?"

For the record, "falling" is the Pius's way of saying "turn into a witch." His rationale behind it is that us turning into witches parallels the "fall from grace" featured in many religions.

Anyway, I ignore his attempt at being condescending and continue on. "Well good, she's not Cleopatra. At least now we know who she's not." To be honest I'm more curious now at how he could not know a damn thing about who she is with the soul gem right in his…ears. "Isn't it your job to make and fiddle with soul gems? How is it that you cannot know where she's from?"

"There are a number of reasons why this could be unknown to me Elaine." Pius answers me patiently. "Most of them are classified however, and the rest are so unlikely they're not even worth mentioning."

I let out a frustrated sigh. So the answer is beyond my pay grade. That's nice. And here I though Pius could answer all of my questions about this girl. Silly me for assuming he'd tell me jack shit. Oh, and silly me for thinking that the alien cat that makes soul gems with the contracts would know anything about them.

"If it's any consolation, if something has affected her soul gem enough that I cannot learn much from it, her mind would be equally affected," Pius states. "More likely than not this girl was being sincere when you met her, so you shouldn't have to worry her trying to kill you in your sleep."

No, it wasn't any consolation, as now none of my questions about how she got in the tomb can be answered. "So what do we do with our insane girl, then?" I ask instead of voicing my frustration any more than I might have already.

"If she means no harm and if I am unable to learn her Officio of origin, I can talk to her and try to convince her to work with us in the 14th." Pius states, with his tail starting to swish back and forth. "She would be a very powerful Eversor, and I would never say no to having another Eversor under my employ."

Somehow I knew he'd go there. 90% of the whole Officio is already made up of Eversors, and he still went there.

"Good luck convincing her." I tell Pius. "For some reason I don't think she'll take working under someone very well. She's more likely to be insulted by working under someone than thrilled by the idea."

"I will keep your advice in mind, Elaine," Pius says as he grabs the soul gem again to wake the girl up.

Almost immediately the girl jolts upright, gasping for air. She looks around wildly until she spots me. "Loyal Peasant! Where am I?" she demands.

"You're in the Fourteenth Officio in Rome." Pius answers for me. "Elaine, your loyal peasant, works for me and she saw fit to inform me of your return to our world, Lady Cleopatra."

Wait, what? Lady Cleopatra? What is the cat doing? Why is he encouraging her delusion?

The girl's eyes widen as she spots Pius. "A talking cat! Ah, the wonders this age has." The girl then turns to me. "You must have been lucky to be able to serve a cat such as this before meeting me."

Oh, that's right. Cats were sacred to Egyptians, mostly because they killed vermin and cobras.

And she thinks I'm lucky to be working for one. Someone kill me.

…Then again, it could be worse. I could be in the 10th… or the 8th… or the 9th for that matter.

"Indeed she is, Lady Cleopatra," Pius continues. "But for the moment, I must speak with you about your plans now that you've returned."

"My plans? I wish to have the world recognize me as its leader once more and to rule over it, just as it should be!" The fake proclaims. "But first, I require knowledge of this world so I may rule over it with as few problems as possible after my ascent."

"Indeed, which is part of the reason why Elaine brought you to me," Pius says as he starts walking in circles around us. He has a bad habit of doing that when he has things to say. "You have been given an opportunity to learn of the world in secret and get your bearings without worrying about anyone attempting to take your right to rule away from you before you are ready."

I just stand there stunned, wondering if I'm actually hearing Pius help the girl plot world domination or if some Callidus with way too much time and magic on their hands is trying to prank me. It might not be a Callidus, though. I could just be drugged for all I know.

"You see, in this day and age you are what we call a magical girl. I will go over the details of what that entails later, but what you need to know at this point is that in this time all magical girls work for Incubators such as myself, and those who don't tend to not last very long." Pius explains. "Obviously someone like you would not work for someone else, lest it imply anyone had power over you. However, if you were to just pretend to work for me, you would have an opportunity to learn of the world with little trouble.

"What an interesting idea…" comments the tan girl. "The best way for me to stay hidden would be to hide in plain sight. That cover shall do nicely until I've learned of this world. What else do I need to know to keep this cover and not have the others suspect me?"

"To make sure no one looking too closely discovers this deception, you will have to do a few jobs for me to keep up appearances." Pius mentions. "You will be paid for them like anyone else, and the extra funds should help you gather the resources you need for your goal."

"Yes, true. Even in my time not everyone would do things for free for royalty. Even our slaves had to be paid a minimal amount to keep them working." She says. "That is acceptable. What else do I need to know for my cover that I should know about?"

Did she not even realize she was just roped into working for the cat?

"Outside of explaining what I can of the modern world and what it takes to be a magical girl, there is not much to tell," Pius says. "Elaine shall be your guide as you travel around the world. Heed her advice, as she will tell you of the people of the world and their needs, wants, and beliefs. They are things that you will need to know in your attempt to rule over them in this age."

"Good, it would be wrong to have my loyal servant separated from me for too long." The girl says.

If I wasn't dumbfounded at Pius getting this girl to work for him, I'd be more annoyed at being demoted to servant in this girl's eyes, and irritated that I'd have to put up with her even longer now.

Pius finally stops circling around us and jumps onto his desk to face us. "Good. In a moment, I shall try to tell you as much as I can of this world so you will not be too lost and bewildered by this world's wonders on your travels. At the moment though, I suspect that Elaine has something she wishes to speak to me about in private."

Oh, you bet I do furball.

"That is fine, I shall wait for you to finish." The girl says. "The world has waited over two thousand years for me, a few moments more will not be much longer for it to wait."

As the girl wanders away from Pius, I walk over, glaring at the cat. "What the hell are you doing?" I hiss. "I thought you were just going to get her to join the Officio, not encourage her delusions!"

Pius just looks at me. "You were the one who told me that she wouldn't take working under me very well, so I decided to convince her that it was in her best interest to do so."

"You flat out fucking lied to her." I snarl. "I thought you were above that."

"I did not once lie to her." Pius replies. "She said that she wanted to rule and needed to learn of the world, and I offered her a method to do so."

"You called her 'Lady Cleopatra.' You were encouraging her insanity."

"She answers to Cleopatra, and things would naturally go smoother if added a suitable title. To my knowledge, none of my brothers have had any success with contracting young males, meaning she must be female and making 'Lady' is a suitable title." The cat states. "As for her insanity, I saw no need to make things more complicated by attempting to cure her of it."

"What about that part about people after her? Who the hell would even be after her? The only ones that know of her are in this room!" I continue.

"I'm sure those in power won't sit quietly if she has any sort of success in taking power away from them. Someone will sooner or later want her gone," He answers.

Tilting his head, Pius asks me a question in return. "Why are you so upset over the matter anyway? This is the easiest solution that doesn't require killing her, is it not? I know how you dislike killing; after all, it's why I decided to make you a Callidus instead of an Eversor in the first place," Pius states. "Think about it, Elaine. This way we don't have to shatter her worldview and risk her falling when she learns that everything she knows is a lie. While she's being paranoid of enemies watching her and waiting for her to reveal her plans, she'll be more likely to behave like a normal, if a bit egotistical, magical girl. If anything, the extra paranoia will be good for her and help her survive longer as an Eversor."

The worst part is that he's right. I can't even try to tell her of this now without making things worse. "It's just wrong to lead her on like that." The whole thing just leaves a bad taste in my mouth. This is why no one goes to the cat for help. He pulls shit like this and occasionally makes comments about "the good old days."

"Your opinion on the matter has been noted."

"I'm not calling her Cleopatra, though." I say, giving up on arguing my point.

"I will convince her to use another name while she's here," Pius says as I walk away. "Lady Cleopatra, it seems Elaine and I have finished. It may take some time for me to explain what being a magical girl entails, so you might want to get comfortable." Pius hops down from his desk again, no doubt getting ready to start circling the girl once he starts monologuing. "Elaine has many things she needs to do before she's ready to go, including heading to the Warmaster. Do not worry though; Elaine will be back in a few hours."

Taking my cue, I leave Pius's office and head towards the Warmaster's office. Anything to keep my mind off of what just happened.

MAGICAL GIRL NOIR QUEST
THE FALL OF CHIAKI MATSUDA

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 11/01/14(Sat)11:16:16 No.35891463 Archived

You thank her for assisting in the repairs of Tiny Pete, making sure to use the elaborately formal language that Mami had tried her best to teach you in those rare, stolen moments that you cared enough to ask. This seems to go over quite well with Barbara, the ironclad girl bowing once more, the smoothness in her gesture going beyond human grace or flexibility - and into something almost boneless in its fluidity.

No, it wasn't that all disconcerting to look at, but you did feel a shiver of instinctive revulsion crawling up your spine at the sight of it. ...That uncanny valley thing that you keep hearing about, most likely.

"On behalf of the Fourth Officio, with the authority given to me by my Warmsmith - blessings upon her name - I accept your heartfelt and cherished gratitude, Warmaster Matsuda, and count on your Officio to help us in times of trial and trepidation, as we have done the same here." She straightens up, her eyes briefly sparking pink before settling back into their usual azure glow. "Should our Officios cross paths once more in the future, then let it always be as allies, and never as enemies."

...Yeah. Right. You hope so too.

>>35891463

You turn to look at Tiny Pete's newly-restored form, tapping the handle of Muramasa against your shoulder. ...Wait, she called him the Indomitus Prototype, or something? If he's a prototype, then that means there's an upgraded model of him somewhere, right?

"Oh, yes!" Barbara smiles, clasping both hands in front of her in affirmation - her polished metal fingers making a delicate clinking noise as they smacked together, bringing to mind tiny wind chimes being jostled by a gentle breeze.

"Tiny...um, Tiny Pete, here, as little Misaka has colorfully named him, is a prototype of the Indomitus-pattern Ironform: a humanoid bipedal weapons platform designed to protect its pilot while augmenting their long-ranged and melee combat capabilities to devastating effect."

She gestures towards the armored giant lashed to its metal rack by cables and support harnesses. "We've been very diligent on improving upon his design, with our very brightest at the helm. I'm pleased to report that we may be able to start mass-production for a commercial release anytime soon!"

You blink at the Fourth Officio liaison, and then at Tiny Pete. The rather long-winded description of your robot buddy aside, you couldn't help but hear the unheard implication of her words. She could have just said it outright, but you had a feeling that she consciously held back from doing so.

"Then that means Tiny Pete is..." You let the sentence hang unfinished between the both of you, as you turn to stare back into the robot girl's glowing eyes. There's the smallest quirk of the corners of her lips, before she nods.

"NO!" Misaka's scream rings out like a gunshot, and with a flurry of grease-stained blue overalls, your arms dealer pushes past you, past Barbara, before placing herself squarely in front of Tiny Pete. Using herself as the tiniest barricade to protect the armored giant from a rather nonplussed robot girl. "TINY PETE IS MISAKA'S! TINY PETE IS GIFT FROM BIG SISTER MURDERFACE, NO ONE IS TAKING HIM FROM MISAKA!"

"Idiot," Rea breathes from beside you, before stepping forward and talking in a louder, clearer voice. Evidently trying to calm your arms dealer down, something she seems to have done a couple of times already. "Misaka, we already talked about this. Miss Barbara--"

"MISAKA FIXED HIM! TINY PETE WAS BROKEN WHEN MISAKA GOT HIM, AND MISAKA FIXED HIM!" The young Russian girl is crying now, a fact that she'd pulled her goggles on to conceal - but there's no mistaking the worsening shudder in her voice, or the twin trails of moisture dripping down her cheeks, down her chin. "BIG SISTER MURDERFACE, PLEASE TELL STUPID ROBOT GIRL TO GO AWAY!"

Rea looks up at you with an expression approaching apologetic embarrassment. "...Sorry, Warmaster. I tried."

You shake your head, before turning to Barbara. ...Is she really sure that Tiny Pete is the Fourth's property? You're going to need some proof, you just can't hand him over--

"Cross-checking with my Officio's very extensive records proves it, Warmaster Matsuda." Barbara holds up a hand, and pinpricks of light shoot from her fingers to manifest a small holographic model of Tiny Pete over her palm. "Tiny Pete matches the Indomitus prototype Ironform that had mysteriously vanished from our armories fifteen months ago, from the...rather unsightly bronze iconography on his pauldrons to the laser-etched microscopic serial numbers on the inside of his armor plating."

Something approaching regret makes the robot girl's smile appear almost human. "I'm sorry, Warmaster Matsuda, but the Ironform that little Misaka refers to as Tiny Pete is in fact the...lost property of the Fourth." Although she didn't say it, you could tell she almost said 'stolen'.

"NO!" Misaka shrieks again. "TINY PETE IS MISAKA'S! STUPID ROBOT GIRL CANNOT TAKE HIM AWAY!"

For some reason I see this being something like "Tiny Pete, or the Prototype, or whatever you want to call it, has been deployed by our Officio several times and has proven extraordinarily capable - hell, it's even saved me from death. As such we're loathe to simply return him, especially as he's an integral part of an upcoming operation. DETROIT
CONSOLIDATED MECHWORKS

[X]Ask Barbara if this can be worked out somehow, to the mutual benefit of your Officios.

They don't NEED Tiny Pete, per se - loss of a single prototype didn't stop them from advancing almost to commercial production stage, after all - but it didn't help them, either, and it must be rather vexing for some expensive tech to walk off like that.

I'd offer them an ongoing research contract. In the real world auto companies often have vehicles in their "auto pool" that are loaned out for employees to use on buisness drives or whatnot, for the express purpose of putting miles on them so techs can later tear them down and examine them in detail, allowing them to study how things held up under wear, tear, impacts, etc. A similar arrangement with the Fourth would let them get the remaining value Tiny Pete has for them, and give us technical support during his (increasingly frequent) tear-down and re-builds.

The only downside is, they need to send someone brave enough to deal with the tiny, tiny, angry cossack.

"Misaka." You call your crying arms dealer by her name, the glowing green tri-slits of her visor swiveling to face you. You beckon her forward with one hand, just as you tuck Muramasa underneath your arm with your other.

"Come here."

The tiny Russian hesitates here, briefly glancing towards Barbara, as if suspecting treachery from the Fourth Officio liaison the moment she leaves her spot in front of Tiny Pete. Misaka mumbles something underneath her breath - something in Russian you couldn't really catch or understand - before she finally moves towards you in a tottering run, stumbling a few steps before burying her face right into your stomach. Her visor clattering loudly on the floor as she sobs into the material of your costume.

You run your fingers through the crying arms dealer's hair, patting her a couple of times, allowing her to cry out her rage in the hopes that it'll calm her down long enough for you to get her to apologize to Barbara.

You can understand her being protective of Tiny Pete, sure - you'd probably have done much worse if you'd been in her place, and you absolutely can't stand the thought of saying goodbye to your reliable robot buddy festooned with spikes and skulls and spiky skulls - but Barbara didn't quite deserve being called a stupid robot girl just yet, when all she did was politely point out the truth. And after helping Tiny Pete get repaired, too.

Thankfully, Misaka does manage to calm down long enough to listen to you, and through a grimy, tear-streaked scowl, she grumbles an apology to Barbara that's as heartfelt as a warning shot right between the eyes. The Fourth Officio liaison had the good grace to accept it, however, even deigning to try and pat Misaka on the head herself - an attempt that was quickly thwarted by the little Russian growling in a way that would've made Sayaka proud.

"...Is there any way we can work this out?" You ask Barbara, after Rea had dragged Misaka away to help her finish up Tiny Pete's repairs - more a pretext to keep the emotional arms dealer away from Barbara than anything else. "A way that could be--" You feel your throat close up at the thought of saying something that a watch-wearing dildo would say, but force it anyway. "--mutually beneficial to both our Officios?"

Barbara's smile brightens here. "Why, yes, Warmaster Matsuda, of course! I must say, I was given orders to assess the situation regarding the missing Indomitus prototype--"

"TINY PETE! HIS NAME IS TINY PETE!" Misaka barks from the other end of the repair bay, before being shushed by Rea. Barbara winces here, before smiling again as she continues.

"--Sorry, Tiny Pete, and to judge what kind of reparations we'd insist upon once we recovered our property. Or if we need to actually recover him at all." Her smile turns into a more knowing one. "I see now that the latter seems the wiser decision - not only because we love little Misaka back in headquarters, but also because I've managed to mine quite a bit of data from him just by assisting in his repairs."

Data? You blink. Data about what?

"Everything he's been going through so far!" Barbara seems excited at this, suddenly in the zealous grip of something that makes her eyes glow just a bit brighter. "How his AI has been adapting to all the threats that he's been encountering, as well as the effects of brutal combat encounters on his moving components!"

She gestures to your robot buddy, where Rea and Misaka seems to be trapped in a shouting argument on what bronzed icons to add to the armor covering his right leg: a skull with spikes, or a spike with a skull impaled on it. "Information like that would help us immensely in our work towards the creation of Ironforms like Tiny Pete!"

Huh. Well. You never thought about it like that.

So you just have to...keep taking him with you to operations, then? That's it?

Barbara nods, still smiling. "As well as allow me or one of my colleagues to come over every now and then, to check up on Tiny Pete and mine the data we require."

...Well. She doesn't seem to be asking for much.

How do you react?

[]Accept the offer. It seems harmless enough, plus this way you can score free repairs for your robot buddy. Maybe even free upgrades.

[X]Accept the offer. It seems harmless enough, plus this way you can score free repairs for your robot buddy. Maybe even free upgrades.

Don't try to 'upgrade' the AI, should be fine otherwise.

Also stipulate that we'd need somebody to be present during the extraction to go over the data to determine how sensitive it is. We'll share it regardless, because we do owe a debt, but we just want to have a say in how thoroughly the Fourth classifies it.

You accept Barbara's offer. It seems reasonable enough - you still get to keep Tiny Pete as your robot buddy and facesmasher, the Fourth gets their data. It's strange how it works out in both your favors, but it's convenient enough that you can't help but say yes.

...Although, you have a couple of concerns--

The Fourth Officio liaison holds up a hand. "We'll only take operational and performance data, Warmaster Matsuda. No visual recordings or audio logs of any sort, not even location data. We just want to measure how he performs, how he adapts, and how his Ironform endures. So you don't need to worry about data breaches or anything of the sort."

Another smile curls Barbara's lips, this one seemingly tailored and practiced to reassure its recipients. "But if you wish that the information be pre-approved before we mine it or take it back to our headquarters, then we have no objection to that. After all, every Officio needs its secrets to survive."

Well. You just want to make sure that you're not accidentally giving anything classified away, that's all. You're glad Barbara's being really reasonable about this, considering Tiny Pete IS her Officio's property.

She giggles here, the sound curiously cute, even with the slightest buzz of static overlaying it. "My primary role involves facilitating communication and goodwill between the myriad Officios and my own, Warmaster Matsuda. Being reasonable is something I'm very good at, among other things." Her glowing blue eyes spark pink again as she seemingly winks at you.

[+100 Barbara Points!]

...At least you've got that settled. You wave Misaka over, to tell her of the deal - and while she seems to be overjoyed (and quite relieved) to know that Tiny Pete is staying, she doesn't seem too eager about having someone from the Fourth come over regularly to examine your robot buddy. She relents a moment later, however - with the condition that only Barbara would be doing the data-mining.

"Stupid robot girl not that incompetent with Tiny Pete," The russian explains grudgingly, still scowling. "Misaka heard stupid robot girl say sorry to Tiny Pete just before removing his AI core. So, not too bad."

"I-I was just...paying my respects to the Ironform's machine spirit, of course, nothing more and nothing less." Barbara chimes in, her voice not as perfectly modulated as before. "Tiny Pete may be a machine, but he feels the way we do. Being taken apart for maintenance, while important and therapeutic, is still an ordeal for him, the way surgery is a traumatic ordeal for meatbags."

...Meatbags?

Barbara flinches here. "A...my apologies, Warmaster Matsuda. Officio argot, for unaugmented Magical Girls. It's...usually a pejorative term, I'm afraid, but I didn't mean it in any offensive capacity, just a slip of the tongue as it were."

Right. Well, none taken, you assure her. You just wanted to know what it meant, even if you are just a meatbag.

"Thank you, Warmaster Matsuda." The Fourth Officio liaison curtseys, clearly relieved.

Anyway, that's one crisis settled, thankfully. And to think you just stopped by here to check up on Tiny Pete! Instead, you had to calm down your surrogate little sister AND negotiate with a representative from a completely different Officio. Fucking watch-wearing dildo work finding you wherever you go, clearly.

Watch-wearing dildo walking! Watch-wearing dildo walking, here!

"Big Sister Murder, Big Sister Murderface!" Misaka calls your attention as she tugs on your sleeve. "Um, why are you down here again? And..." Her eyes narrow up at the sword still stucked underneath your arm. "...Why are you carrying Kirika's sword? Big Sister Murderface is Vindicare, not Eversor!"

You smile down at her and shake your head. No, you came down here to check up on Tiny Pete, because you'll need him for a mission later.

"Oh!" Misaka's eyes grow wide here. "W-well, why didn't Big Sister Murderface just say so?! Misaka will get Tiny Pete operation-ready in no time at all!" She rolls up her sleeves, clearly eager to get to work. "Ah, what kind of armament would Big Sister want Tiny Pete to come with?"

Well...the usual ones? He always came with that big hammer of his, right?

Misaka nods. "Yes, but have new ones too! Is important to pick the right one for the right combat scenario!"

Huh. Well...sure. What are your choices?

With Barbara's help in deciphering Misaka's mile-a-minute explanations filled with mind-numbing technical explanations and jargon, you discover that you can have Tiny Pete outfitted in the following modes:

\>Assault: Thunder Hammer + Plasma Gun + Jumpjets
\>Devastator: Reaper Autocannon + Bolter + Refractor Shield
\>Original Recipe: Thunder Hammer + Bolter + Refractor Shield
> Mystery: ???

What's the mystery mode? You turn to Misaka, puzzled.

"It is a mystery!" Misaka replies, grinning. You turn to Barbara, who simply smiles as well, seemingly in on the joke too.

Which mode would you have Tiny Pete outfitted into?

Urgh. You can't help it, that 'Mystery' mode is gonna drive you crazy no matter what it is, so that's what you pick. The other modes sound cool and all, honestly - the mere mental image of Tiny Pete rocketing skyward one moment and then smashing his giant hammer down onto his enemies as he landed, like the fist of an angry god, is enough to make you salivate in excitement - but you know that you'll always regret not picking the mystery mode, with its tantalizing lack of information.

And sure, there's always the risk of it being disappointing, but...well, Misaka has a good track record for her surprises, at least. Tiny Pete was one of them, and he'd never disappointed every time you called him in, or fought by his side. Not even once.

So yeah. Mystery it is.

"Big Sister Murderface has chosen Mystery!" Misaka cheers, jumping and waving her arms all at once. In contrast, Rea simply pouts, as if displeased at your decision. You ask her about this - and all this does is earn you a puzzled stare.

"...No, Warmaster. This is how I usually look." Your Vindicare Rank Leader tells you, deadpan. "Mystery Mode does take a bit longer to set up, but I don't mind it. Miss Barbara's helping us, and with Misaka's mood considerably improved from earlier, it's something I'm actually looking forward to."

Hah. Well. That seems like a good sign, then. Is Mystery Mode really all that it's cracked up to be?

Rea nods. "I'm not supposed to tell you, because it's a surprise, but..." Shes seems to pause here for dramatic effect. "...it'll be breathtaking."

>> ☐ Anonymous 11/01/14(Sat)15:17:16 No.35895025

Oh. That reminds me:

If Misaka and Rea are about done with Pete, send the two of them on to Yuma. Misaka particularly since she's not a Meguca and shouldn't be affected by her.

Need to design her some kind of augmentation. Maybe they could get Babs help: Seems like the fourth may already have some tech in this area, and I think Kyubey would agree that, as our lone prognosticator, Yuma would be worth the expense.

...Right. Suddenly, you can't wait. Yeah, the Prophet op as it is right now is looking pretty dangerous, and not all of you may come back from it, but all the same - you can't help but imagine the look on Oriko's face when you come charging in, not just with your Kill-Team but also with a black-armored giant bristling with all sorts of weaponry. Ready to smash things and kill dreams in the face.

After a few more minutes of trying to eke out more details about Mystery mode from Misaka and Rea - and failing miserably - you also pitch your idea: about Rea piloting Tiny Pete as you call him right into the op itself. This of course got the two arguing again, until it was settled in a good old-fashioned Rock Paper Scissors game. Rea won, after three do-overs. Misaka probably would've thrown another tantrum then, but the good news of Tiny Pete staying made her amenable enough to accept defeat. It was therefore decided that Rea would, indeed, be piloting Tiny Pete in the Prophet op.

Well, you should probably check up on your team mates next, huh? They should be...somewhere in Headquarters.

You have time to visit only one venue.

I don't think we got an answer last night, but was Malal in her costume or her hardsuit when Kharn found her corpse?
Because if the former, then I'm glad she got to see her best friend's face, at least once.
But if so, I wonder how the templars from the 2nd reacted to seeing the actual fucking Blessed Lady in the flesh

I'd say Malal was in her suit while the talk with uma and the tansformation into an eldritch goddess was on a spirit/mental/whatever not physical level. The Templars would surely have freaked out if they'd seen her face, considering how they went on about Sayaka looking like the First knight and all.

I don't remember off the top of my head, but:

Introtech level (due to being made by a small startup mech design company during 3040 or so)

35 tons, goes 7/11/0. Most popular configurations were 1LLaser/1MLaser/1Flamer, 2 MLaser/2 SRM-4 with 1 ton of ammo.

Biggest selling points were: modular armor (could swing from 4.5t-6.5t without major refit work), modular jump-jets (could fit up to 6 or so without drastic alterations to the chassis), modular weapon brackets, roomy cockpit, ease of maintenance, and disarming grin. Though not quite as versatile as an Omnimech, the players thought that making an easily customizable and recognizable 'mech was the way to go. Plus, selling proprietary weapon housing was thought to be a good way to make money after the 'mech design was sold.

It was early afternoon when Izuho Taniguchi ended her stay of several hours in the Third Officio's hospital wing. A hulking Eversor with a tendency to loom over her patients, wrapped up in what might charitably be called a costume: An ill-fitting patchwork of dark purple woolen cloth, kevlar and pieces of metal armour. Clearly designed, as she knew all too well, for someone who kept the sort of shape that was generally intended for a human; no longer quite sufficient, but it would have to do. In some ways, it looked like something that might be more at home attached to a siege engine of some sort, but then, she supposed, that wasn't entirely off the mark. Not clothing or even armour so much as a holster for a weapon, in a manner of speaking.

It wasn't that she needed the hospital herself, of course. ...Well, that wasn't entirely true. It was a useful vent, whether that was the point of visiting or not. Find a few of the wounded to apply some of her spare energy to. It wasn't enough, but it took some of the strain off her, and it meant that the Third had almost no need for any other medical care. There wasn't a great deal that an application of pure life force couldn't fix.

Best to spend what she could before it overflowed, anyway.

The last ten minutes or so had been occupied by cleaning up the mess she had left, as usual. Every two hours, like clockwork, she would find an ideally discreet place and... there was really no good way to put it. If an injection was out of the question, it would be a knife to the throat or a bullet through the head. The former, this time. Regular near-death experiences to keep her powers in check, distracted with rebuilding a broken body. Still, it was messy, and needless to say, remarkably painful. Practice made it easier, at least.

"I want to live". Four of the most poorly considered words she had ever said.

Mercy Killing 1: Near-Death Experience (forgot the title before)

The walk down to the Venenum's office – as per the instructions on her phone – earned her a good few stares, but then, so did just about every waking moment. A massive, somewhat misshapen Eversor was enough of a sight, even when she didn't have, say, a vestigial hand growing out of one elbow on that particular day, to take one past example. Overflowing life force tended to find its home in no end of regenerative mutations. Her veined eyes and the bags under them testified to no end of sleep deprivation, even if that no longer affected her health. Not much did. It was still easier than passing without notice outside, at least.

Not having to wear a cloak to cover all the partial and broken weapons sticking out of her was, after all, something of an improvement. She settles down on a bench along the way and opens up her lunchbox – something of a misnomer with how rarely she used it to store food these days. Instead, she picks out three grief seeds, grimacing slightly as she looks them over. It was inevitable, of course, with the sheer amount of magic she expended just existing. The details were beyond her, but Harumi had suggested that it was unwise for anyone in this profession to go without grief seeds for long if they spent as much power as she did.

Now, if only she could use them normally. Still, beggars couldn't be choosers. She swallows one after the other, wincing slightly at the sharp sting. Why did they have to be so sharply pointed? At least it would dissolve quickly enough. Funny; somehow, swallowing a tiny sphere with a spike on the end made her more uncomfortable than slitting her own throat. Maybe she could look into another way, one of these days, to get through her dosages.

The Venenum's office lay ahead. They had belonged to the same officio for a while, but not had a great deal of time to speak before, and now she had an outright request to enter the laboratory. Curious and, given that she had largely supplanted the work any healer might have at the Third, more than a little awkward. It might have been strange to feel a sort of faint guilt over treating the wounded, but then, there was so much in this life that made little sense.

The door was plain enough, wooden and adorned with a brass plate: Penelope Baines, Venenum. A scratch reaches across the name, and under it, an addition in black marker, in the sort of handwriting that spoke of the highest levels of medical enlightenment: 'Penny Dreadful'. She'd heard the title before, certainly; that it was at the Venenum's insistence was news to her.

The woman was a knight, she was certain of it; all the more reason to look forward to this meeting. The profession was, to her faint embarrassment, among her long-standing fascinations. One of the Knights Hospitaller, perhaps. Those still existed, didn't they? She was almost certain she had read something to that effect before. Of course, some would tell her Britain was no longer a land of knights – that she was pinning some entirely unreasonable hopes on one of the Third's few foreign members – but the existence of the Second made her point for her well enough, or so she liked to think.

It only left the question, really, of why she was being brought here, but that question would be answered soon enough. She brushes a little strand of blue out of her eyes, and knocks on the door.

She missed the cauldrons, she really did. It had to be vats, lately. Sanitary reasons, they had said, as well as ensuring consistent results. Well, maybe that was for the best; the less they tried to look like witches, the better. The cat stayed, though, for as long as it could keep itself out of an accident. A bedraggled half-stray tabby that spent most of its time bumping into equipment or table legs head-first, and occasionally biting her leg.

As cats went, Rags was not an especially good one, but this one was hers. At least, the cat seemed to think so, and she was in no hurry to correct it.

Now, sprayer in working order, vats bubbling – she had always set the spare ones to bubble, just for the look of the thing – and the remainder of the chemical stocks were churning in a way that vaguely implied progress. Fooling around with schematics would have to wait a little longer, but that was alright, she had enough to occupy herself with.

She would need names, too. They didn't have names yet for half of her concoctions, and as much as the implications from that pleased her, it was all a little inconvenient. Except for the barrel of warm, thick yellowish liquid behind her, of course. Everyone recognised custard just fine, even if she didn't let most of them dip into her personal supply. What if she went sharing it around and needed a fresh batch for herself in some sort of emergency? What then?

She would be able to imagine just that sort of emergency some day, she was sure of it. Everyone had their vices, and this was hers. Well, this and unspeakably noxious chemicals.

The Venenum climbs up a ladder, cracking open a tall container of some roiling acid and scooping up a cup of it. The cup would hold for a while, at least; meanwhile, she leans in to take a long sniff of the gasses that stung her eyes and burned her skin. Nothing she could ever get away with as an ordinary human, as she would happily admit, but she enjoyed the smell, and a little burning never killed anyone. ...Not anyone like her, at least. Just one of the job's little perks.

Transforming on her way – might as well make the right sort of impression – she goes to answer the knock at the door, right on time, swinging the door wide open with such speed that it slams into the wall, before greeting the newcomer with open eyes and an ear-to-ear smile.

“Yer richt on time! Come in, come in! Welcome to tha lair o' Penny Dreadful!” She leaned in to add a little conspiratorial whisper, as if sharing her greatest secret with the recently arrived Eversor. “M.D., o'course.”

“Er... good afternoon, Miss Baines”, came the answer, the guest lumbering into the laboratory with all the nervous caution of a frightened mouse, trying her best not to knock anything over. A guffaw from Penelope is the only answer she receives for this.

“Aye, aye, guid affie an' whitnot. Nae need ta be so stiff, Izzy. Didna think ye'd be sae quick! Most keep me waitin' for yonks, jes' dinna ken how to hurry! Real treat, it is.” While the Venenum was hardly imposing – slightly rounded and strutting about her laboratory in a sweater and jeans, with a mop of orange hair – she certainly made every effort to intimidate. She wore a bright red, chemical-spattered coat and a black hat more at place on a highwayman, like a tricorne that woke up on the wrong side of the bed. Her pockets practically overflowed with rusted, blood-encrusted scissors and scalpels, while a bulky tool belt held no end of vials, as well as a pair of wickedly sharp claws.

Then there was the grin, right under a pair of uncannily bright green eyes; Izuho, at least, was rather certain that it would have made a shark uncomfortable.

“M.D.? So you're-” she asked, before being cut off. 'Penny' seemed inordinately pleased by the question, as if she had been waiting for it.

“Mean an' devious”, she answers with a little cackle. “Dead chuffed tae meit ye.”

Peeling her eyes away from the gallery of toxins and acids around her, not to mention its caretaker, Izuho forced herself to focus, though not without being a little mystified by the entire experience. Certainly, from what she had heard, the Venenum had been in Japan for some time and should be able to speak the language without difficulty, but every word was wrapped up in a nigh-impenetrable accent, and that was before she started bringing in words that could only be guessed at. It didn't quite add up, or so she liked to think.

Then again, it was getting harder to put anything past the chemist with every passing moment.

“You needed me for something, Miss- I mean, Penny? If this is about the hospital wing, then I'm sorry, but-”

“Naw, I dinna care fer havin' ta deal with doctorin'. Fykie business. Ye took a right heavy load off me back, mm? Naw need tae g'won aboot wark; ye want a tour o' th' lab?” An eager, pointy-toothed smile for the newcomer, as she gestured towards the labyrinth of nightmarish chemicals ahead.

Before she knew what she was doing, Izuho had agreed. Curiosity got the better of her.

“...An' that one's th' sprayer, loaded up with a noo batch. Reckon that's it! Anythin' ta speir at me over?”

"Is it true that you came from the Second?" The chemist blinked once, twice, apparently not expecting the topic, then burst into peals of laughter. It takes a while for her to wipe her eye with a slightly seared plastic glove, calming down enough to answer.

"Naw. Sec'nd disna tak thugs, y'see? All about bluidlines an' whitnot. I got na bluidlines, jes' a wrench an' some poison." Another of her grins as she waves a surprisingly normal wrench about, retrieving it from one of her pockets. "Willna take me, an' that's foyn. Came here instead; Mita-whatsit's a guid toun."

"...Ah." Well, that explained a few things. "Er... what did you need me here for, again?"

This time, Penelope was far more eager to explain than before, hefting the large, chrome-plated chemical sprayer and its pair of sloshing canisters up in her arms, giving it a meaningful tap as she looks at the Eversor.

"Gotta fresh batch of th' mean stuff right 'ere, brand noo mix! So I tole me phone, 'git th'... th' lairge one, th' melty lassie, Izzy. Naw one o' th' wee 'uns."

"...How do I come into this?" The Eversor asks, with a faint sinking feeling.

"Bin nearly two oors by noo, mm?"

"...Ah. Thank you?"

My theory is that the scale of the points and whether it's relatively 'good' or not varies enormously from person to person. We got 10000 Kyouko points but you get 1500 just for getting her a sandwich, we got like 10 Wendy points but she tends to only give out +5s for pretty significant things.

Something like that.

The next ten minutes passed in a blur, which was perhaps for the best. When any sort of clarity returned to the world, the testing area was drenched and covered in smoke, while most of Izuho was reduced to a collection of bone and chemical burns. She couldn't help but be a little impressed despite herself, both by the effect and the sheer power of the painkillers she had received beforehand. A shame that the latter kept her from being able to walk just yet.

"Guid wark, guid wark. Hol' still, aye? Looks like I skailed some of th' ole nasty bubblies. Dinna want tae touch it. Wad keep yerself t'gether till ya can move richt again. Got somethin' for ye in a second. ...Ah! Y'need any scran, Izzie?"

The baffled look must have been taken as agreement; it did not take long for the Venenum to return with a bowl of what looked to be, of all the things she might find in a lab, custard with pieces of fruit floating in it. Presented, admittedly, with a cheery warning to avoid getting any on the currently-exposed portions of her skull.

Well, that would heal soon enough.

“An' while I mynd, I've got some o' these for ye.” A small box lined with, as far as Izuho could tell, syringes. “Will nae even sting! Jes' a little tickle, real tidy!” She gave her visitor – and until a moment ago, test subject – an enthusiastic pat on the back, only to pull her partially skewered and bloody palm away. She should have noticed the exposed blade, really. Best not to mention it.

In passing, it occurs to the Eversor that she should have felt perhaps a little less grateful to receive a boxed set of lethal injections. Then again, there was no arguing the convenience of it; it was some sort of consideration, after a fashion.

“Oh! Dinna forget to bring th' greetseeds in the morn's morn, now! Gotta grind 'em up for ye, see if we can see how t'make...” She thinks for a moment, then chuckles. “I dinnae ken, some kinda sad milkshake?”

Staggering out of the office ten or twenty minutes later with – of all things – repeated thanks to Penelope despite herself, she could only wonder what she should expect of their next meeting, and if, judging by what she had heard, every Venenum was...

It takes a moment to realise that her last question had been said out loud, and then only by the laughter behind her?

Trials of the Thrice-Cursed

Chapter 2-1: High Seas Slaughter

I used to work for the Ninth. Those missions were some of the most fun things I did in my life, and since that incident happened, I didn't think I'd be able to do things like that anymore. I couldn't be more glad to have been wrong.

I stood on the fore deck of the cargo ship as it closed in to the location of the ultimatum that had been sent to it, wearing a bright red kimono with golden details and ornaments. I knew there would be blood, so this was the best choice. What I didn't know however, was how. The pirates' boast had been bold, but vague, and as the vessel slowly plowed the water all I could think of was: "what were they going to do? what was their trump card?" Already I was imagining the possibilities and it made me more eager the more I waited.

Soon enough the ship came to a halt. Mist had been starting to rise slowly for the past two hours or so, but now it thickened at a suspicious speed. Some had been predicted by Silke, but this was more than there should have been - unless I was just remembering wrong of course, which was equally possible - hinting that the enemy may have hired a Callidus to conceal their approach.

It made no difference to me in the end. I didn't rely only on sight, but on all my senses, failing that I could push them even further with my combat drugs. I was tempted to ingest some Rose right there and then but I restrained myself. Taking it too early would just waste most of its duration waiting for the enemy to show up. I simply closed my eyes and focused instead: I heard the semi-regular flow of the weak waves on the hull, I smelled the cold and salt of the high seas.

It was coming.

Another engine purred in the distance, made faint by some means I could only take guesses at. The scent of smoke tickled my nose; they were coming from the same direction as the wind. I made my way to port side with a quick pace.

+What are you doing? you're leaving your position.+ a sharp pain stabbed at my mind as I heard Silke's voice as clearly as if she was right behind me even though she was supposed to be on the other end of the ship. I didn't know how to reply to that strange... telepathy, for a lack of better word, so I didn't, and her voice stabbed me once more; cold, harsh. +You better know what you're doing.+

"They're coming, kid." I simply whispered to myself. I highly doubted she could hear me, but it felt good to give justification. By now the mist had thickened so much that it was impossible to see more than a few meters ahead of yourself. If the pirates hailed the cargo ship or anything it didn't show. All I heard from our side was the calm and the waves. Most likely the human crew was left totally in the dark, else I would be hearing the frantic clanks of people running on metallic stairways and catwalks or just.. something. The smoke was close now, tickling my nose again.

Before long, something else joined the smoke and the salt. Iron, copper, sulfur. It was a smell I knew; a smell I liked. But it was not a smell that belonged here, nor a smell that belonged to mere pirates. This had gotten even more interesting. My own blood started to boil in anticipation, the wait was burning me.

And then it finally started with a loud clanking noise.

Who the fuck even use boarding ramps anymore? This isn't the 16th century.

It tore into the hull with massive, fang-like hooks that shook the deck while a number of chains were fired across the side, tangling the railing. Then came the howling. This was honestly not what I had expected, but I braced myself for it. The smell of brimstone became pungent, almost enough to bother me. Fortunately I didn't have much time to be annoyed.

The first hound leaped at me and I brought my left arm to guard. It bit down on my armored forearm with enough strength that if it were mere flesh it would have been chomped clean off; enough to have gone through normal armor as well. I was able to get a good look at the thing in the split second between this instant and the one where my right hand's black claws pierced the soft underflesh of its red neck and pushed until they ripped all the way through.

The creatures looked like massive hounds - or small wolves - but had no fur. They were covered in red scales from head to toe and sported claws and fangs better fit for dinosaurs. To complete the imagery, some of them bore spikes on their bony heads while other had web-like, fleshy growths of sickening green colors. All of them had eyes that knew no hunger, but only hatred for all living. And then some more.

I knew those creatures, but they didn't belong here. They didn't belong in the real world. They shouldn't be here.

That was all I had the time to think before more attacked and others spread across the deck; this would be the wrong kind of messy. The hounds were fast and nimble, more than their heavy, large frames had any right to be and even someone like myself couldn't under-estimate them. A single moment of inattention would be enough to have your body entirely picked and torn apart by those beasts.

My body twisted and spun, giving them their match. fangs first met claws when a gaping maw was rammed by fleshmetal, black steel impaling into soft daemon flesh and coming out coated in gray and white pulp. I tossed back the twitching husk into the fray but not quickly enough to fully avoid another maw that took a chunk out of my left arm, a bit below the shoulder, rendering it useless for a moment.

"Kch, arrogant little mutts." I jumped and landed forcefully on the most distant one, causing its legs to buckle and giving me time to sink my good claw into the back of its neck. It was more difficult with the thick protective scales, but I still had enough hold to twist and break its neck without issues. By that time the pack had already turned back and--

It would just have been too convenient if they all stayed here for me to kill. Gunfire and screams started to erupt at other parts of the ship. I could hear it all clearly as I continued my work; pleas, cries for help, shrieks, last rambles of agony. I needed to finish this quickly, so I attempted to do so in the most efficient way. Baleful energies gathered, coating my good hand in ephemeral colors while my other arm was still regenerating. With another jump to dodge the dogpile of daemon-hounds I released the energy downwards in the form of several spheres of volatile, empyrean force. They detonated violently on impact, covering this area of the deck in purple flames that shifted tones with every heartbeat.

I had under-estimated those things. The explosion itself had blew away some of the further ones and caused them to fall into the ocean where they would surely drown, but the others stood insultingly unaffected by the Warpfire licking at their bodies. I moved back in without a second thoughts; fleshmetal drawing blood, daemon fangs drawing blood.

If only I could enjoy this dance of death just a little while longer, ah...

The last of the husks fell down heavily as it hit the railing with a crunching sound, bending the steel and tumbling down into the dark waters below. I knew I was right to pick red. My kimono was tattered by countless slices and tears and even my long black hair was stained crimson, but my body held nicely. It would take more than hell-spawned familiars to keep me down. I made my way to the Aft deck at full speed. I needed to hunt down the spread out creatures, but the first priority was the Culexus. She sighted them far too long ago already...

Silke was sitting down against the wall near the door leading to the bridge, breathing heavily and looking exhausted even with her helmet on. Her chest rose and fell quickly. She seemed completely out of it, but she wasn't dead yet, so that was all that really mattered.

Around the little Culexus was.... the things looked like they were shot by some sort of heavy, heat-weapon from a sci-fi movie. Entire halves of canine bodies were just gone, the remains charred with the missing parts nowhere to be found. Another was blown off the middle with 60% of its body gone and meager, charcoaled ends pathetically twisted on each side of the ashes.

Just what the fuck -are- Culexus anyway...

"Hey, don't witch out on me kid." I reached out a hand and Silke looked up slightly before weakly taking the outstretched hand. I helped her to her feet

"I.. didn't let.. any of them in.. so the bridge is safe... but I.. couldn't.. " I put a bloodied finger on her lips with a small 'shh' and stopped her. I then produced a Grief Seed from my inventory and handed it over to her. There was a short moment of silence as she applied it and her breathing stabilized for the most part. "I'm sorry.. I couldn't pinpoint the source.. I had to stay here and take care of this.."

"It's fine." I shook my head lightly and tried to speak in a comforting tone. Try being the keyword here. "We'd be pretty fucked if we completed the mission but didn't have the crew to bring this ship back to port."

"Do.. do you have any idea what those things were?" Silke hazarded, still clearly a bit shaken and my bloodied appearance probably not helping at all.. "They were like familiars... but we aren't in a Witch's Barrier."

I just nodded. "I felt the same too, but I have no idea how that'd be possible." I let out a small breath "We'll have to find out later, I need to finish clearing up." I turned around and tried to head off but a gloved hand stopped me.

"Wait!" Silke's voice rose above her usual shy tone and forced me to look back. "When I Pulse to you. Stop. Being. Silent." I blinked, both surprised by her sudden coldness and serious as well just genuinely lost as to what she was even talking about. "Simple. I send a message to you, you focus back on me."

+Like this+

"Ouch fuck." the message stabbed me more strongly than it did earlier. "That hurts, but fine I'll.. try to do the thing." I sighed with annoyance and rubbed the back of my head. "Yes. You do the thing. The thing is -important-" she replied flatly before letting me go.

Without wasting more time I headed back towards the center of the ship to hunt down the remaining hellspawns. It wasn't pretty. The crewmen that had been left to their own devices didn't have any chance, even those with firearms. They were all torn apart. Even those who had tried to hide had been killed, most likely sniffed out if those things had the same sense of smell their canine forms suggested.

+Alright, now let's set a plan.+ I cringed lightly, but Silke's Pulse was softer so it was bearable, so I tried to do the thing.
==[6/12]

+I'm a little busy, but what have you got?+ I tried to do the thing, but I didn't know if it worked just yet. I learned soon enough when my mind was metaphorically stabbed again. This would take a lot of getting used to.

+After you finish securing the cargo, we'll board the pirates' ship.+ a small pause, hesitation? +I was supposed to do it myself earlier, but you saw what happened.+

+Sounds good to me. We'll meet up at the ramp once I'm done.+ I tried the thing again.

+Understood+ was her final answer. I was pretty thankful to be getting a break from this. Did this pain always affect other Magical Girls whenever they message them this way or was it just my body reacting strangely again? I couldn't help but also wonder why that would be if it were the case.

Strangely enough, when I reached the nearest straggler, it vanished, dispelled into some sort of fairy dust bullshit. I didn't know what happened, but it told me that for whatever reason, those things had limits to their presence. Maybe they could only be here for a limited amount of time, maybe they went too far from.... whatever hole they crawled out of. I didn't know the specifics, but it seemed that way. I scoured the whole cargo for their presence but found no more of them.

Chapter 2-2: High Seas Slaughter

I made my way to the boarding ramp and found Silke waiting for me there. Actually, she was leaning on the intact railing and looking down at the waters, avoiding to give any direct look to the charnel house that was the deck on her left. The purple flames had gone out a while ago, which was good as they would have made things even more surreal for the younger Magical Girl. I wondered just how much stuff she had seen up to now; how used she was to this kind of scenes.

"Let's get this over with." she didn't make any comments, didn't ask me any question, just went straight to business with her voice completely robbed of any tone by that strange vox-caster thing. "I'll let you go in first then take advantage of the commotion."

I nodded lightly. This was usually the Eversors' job anyway so it made perfect sense, even though I couldn't grasp what she had planned to do herself just yet. "No problem with me, this should be easy." I gave a small grin, but she didn't look away from the water.

"Don't be careless, after this we don't know what else they're capable of." she immediately scolded my casualness and my smile dropped. I walked over and put a hand on her shoulder, forcing her to look at me. I tried to keep my voice neutral and not to look angry... not too irritated at least. "I may be 'new' here, but I'm not a Green. You can kick back and relax if you want, I'll show you not to worry about me."

Silke stared at me for a few seconds and I could imagine behind that helmet of hers she might have looked pretty irritated. Again however, she didn't display any aggressivity, responding with the same flat tone. "If you insist. I'll leave you some space." I couldn't help but feel like I offended her somehow, but that tended to be a thing I often did without meaning to.

That wasn't something I had time to mind at the moment though. Whoever was leading those so-called "pirates" was probably a bit stunned their initial attack didn't succeed, but even if they were they wouldn't stay that way forever. For all I knew they were already preparing a Plan B right this moment. I didn't wait any longer and decided to step up the game. The scent of sulfur and iron rose again suddenly, but this time it wasn't a surprise.

It was my doing.

Empyrean energies surged through my body, pushing its speed and my reaction times even further than Eversor training already had. In a heartbeat's time I was already gone, having crossed to the other side of the ramp and onto the other ship. It was a very peculiar feeling, but most of all it was an addictive one. How could I say... It was a little like the feeling of speed and freedom some people got when riding motorcycles or cars really fast, mixed with the lightness that came from a good drink and with small random electric shocks keeping you on edge. That would just about begin to describe it. What awaited me on the other side of the boarding ramp though was... confusing, to say the least, and much less pleasant.

It led to some sort of large magical enclosure made by wards that projected some sort of three-walls barrier to block the way further onto the ship from their side of the ramp, but that part made sense. The part that did not make sense was how the inner side of the enclosure was even more bloodied than the cargo we were tasked to protect. There must have been enough body parts for a dozen or two of people's worth, all ripped apart in the same way that the pseudo-familiars' unfortunate victims.

It was a little difficult to see with the deck as it was practically literally painted red and caked with gore, but underneath the charnel there were large inscriptions and marks, as if it was all part of some dark ritual of sorts. Great, me and religious types never worked out, even while I had my whole 'Blessed Lady' phase I really got into. Not that that's entirely over either... I guess, but I just can't stand people who can't think for themselves without deferring to some 'higher authority' to dictate everything like the bad zealot cases do.

I didn't waste too much time here either, the sigils were in too bad shape to tell me anything worthwhile. The Barriers were once again insultingly resistant to my attacks, being completely unaffected by explosive bolts, but they weren't so tall that I couldn't just jump over them. It was almost as if they were there to contain something else.

Either way, the thick mist that concealed their advance earlier turned into an advantage for me as I began my work. The lack of visibility prevented them from spotting me from a distance and prevented any would-be Vindicare - or just human snipers, those can still hurt a lot too with the right expensive toys - from tracking and lining a shot.

As I expected it was very easy to purge the deck, humans were appallingly sluggish and dull compared to hell-spawned beasts. Those who didn't freak out at my sudden appearance were rarely fast enough to even move their guns in my general direction and those who were missed by a mile. It must have been terrifying for them, to hear gunshots, screams, then silence, all in close succession and creeping ever so closer. All this while being unable to see what was even going on. Some cracked of course and tried to spray bullets in the general direction of their ex-living 'comrades', some even not -waiting- for them to be dead, backstabbing bastards, but it was futile. By the time they fired the only thing left to eat the steel was corpses.

>> ☐ Zweihart 11/01/14(Sat)16:02:18 No.35895864

Once I finished purging everything on the outer section, Silke met up with me at the back. Whoever was in command here was holing up in the superstructure and left the goons to fend for themselves. It was kinda pathetic actually, considering there was no way they didn't have some magical firepower too. But then again considering the visibility maybe they thought they had better chances inside. By now the Fel power that had strengthened me earlier was gone, its bright flame having cooled down to dying embers. All this asides though, there was something that concerned me a fair bit more.

"What Barrier?"

This is wrong.

"The Wards"

"There wasn't anything like that."

No.

I kicked off the ground and landed a dozen or so meters above, onto the side of the superstructure, turning my profile towards the 'Culexus' and prepared to defend myself. If they used a Callidus to conceal their approach they could be using one -now-. I brought out my Soul Gem and kept it out of sight by blocking it with my body. The thing could use some serious cleansing, but it wasn't the time for that.

+Excuse me but.. what are you doing?+ The sharp pain in the back of my mind snapped me back from my sudden burst of Paranoia and I cringed, not so much from the pain than a little bit from shame. I sighed and brought back my Soul Gem to its other form on the back of my neck before hopping down back onto the main deck, uttering a small apology.

"No, it's fine.." The Culexus' voice sounded... almost pleased? it was hard to tell with this damned vox. "It's good to see you're more cautious than you let on." Silke moved ahead towards the steel door and gave it a small testing nudge. "It's been welded shut..."
==[11/12]

I took the hint and moved closer. "Can't you use whatever it was you used on the Familiars? it seemed pretty damn powerful."

The Culexus shook her head lightly, simply giving a small "it's complicated." I raised an eyebrow but kept the questions for later. At that point I was starting to have a whole grocery list of weird shit I wanted her to explain.

I warned her to take some distance and she complied while I put the palm of one hand flat on the door and took a small breath. Once more baleful energies coated the ebon metal but this time there was no space for the energy to coalesce and it was released in one large detonation that ripped through the steel and left the sides of the gaping hole horribly twisted and mangled. I heard a small gasp behind me just before the heavy thud of the once-door several meters away.

"When we get back from this mission, we need to talk."

What the hell? That was my line.

If memory serves right, Kyubey looked into Akemi Homura and found nothing, even with his brothers. But Madoka had a different name in this world, so this Homura might be the same. Or rogue. Or Akuma messing around without the Incubators knowing, they are enslaved by her after all.

To be fair, some of Coobie's brothers are dickbutts. Akemi Homura could be contracted to an officio that has plans for our doppleganger.

The "Akuma owns all incubators" thread isn't one that comes up often, which is surprising. What if Kyubey has been working for Homucifer this whole time that we've been trusting him with almost everything?

MAGICAL GIRL NOIR QUEST
THE FALL OF CHIAKI MATSUDA

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 11/08/14(Sat)08:57:45 No.36035076 Archived

You decide to go and see how Midori's doing. A part of you wants to check up on the members of the Kill-Team you'll be going into the Akashic Realm with - after all, they'll be the ones you'll be fighting side by side with when the shit inevitably hits the rotating blades - but another part tells you that all you'd be doing is intruding on something intimate and personal, like a couple's last few moments together before they're made to fight for each others' lives. ...At least, in Kyoko's and Sayaka's case, at least. You've no idea what's going on between Mami and Wendy, but you have your suspicions.

Just suspicions, though. Yeah. Just that.

...Anyway. After a quick call to Kyuubey to confirm that Midori's no longer at his office, learning...whatever it is the mutant cat wanted her to learn, and it's with Muramasa in hand that you make your way towards your own quarters. Apparently, Midori was a startlingly-quick learner, and got a handle on whatever she was supposed to understand right away, impressing your Incubator even more than she already had. That said, he was mildly surprised at your Callidus immediately asking to be excused directly after they finished, running off to the Warmaster's Office even before Kyuubey could say yes.

"I didn't mind the break in protocol, Matsuda, but I did find her behavior somewhat strange." Kyuubey had said. "Any other Callidus, Matsuda, and I'd have her detained and executed for suspicion of espionage."

File: transcendentonegrin.png (380 KB, 1500x1000)

Of course, he meant it as a joke, even deigning to point it out a sentence later, and then apologizing for it after listening to your cold, disapproving silence. "Not the kind of joke I should make, I realize in retrospect." He added, just before ending the call.

Of course it's not the joke he - or anyone else - should be making, for fuck's sake. It's crass, inappropriate, and completely uncalled for. Midori's done enough for you - and by extension, for this entire Officio - that suspecting her of espionage is objectively insane and warrants a spot execution delivered personally by you and your Desert Eagle. She's done as much for you as Mami did - and even then, probably more. So FUCK anyone who would dare try to insinuate or even think otherwise, you'll tear them apart with your bare hands--

You grit your teeth and shake your head, making a conscious effort to loosen your white-knuckled grip on Muramasa. Now's not the time to get mad. Kyuubey didn't mean it, after all. He was just making a joke, after all.

Just a joke, you repeat to yourself, stopping in front of the door leading to your Office. You knock twice, and - hearing Midori's hurried 'Come in!' - you pull it open and step inside.

"Ah, sempai!" Midori beams as she greets you, and you catch a whiff of something vaguely resembling flowery perfume in the air inside your office, along with the sound of hissing, steaming water. You also notice that your Callidus is very lightly dressed - in fact, you don't think she's wearing anything underneath that white apron barely holding everything in.

"Quick, close the door and take your clothes off!"

You kick the solid, heavy wooden door behind you shut, just as you reach over and unceremoniously drop Muramasa into your office's umbrella basket. A moment later, and you've cancelled your transformation, your Magical Girl costume winking out of existence to reveal your half-naked form in all its pale and noodly glory - the many scars you've earned throughout your career criss-crossing over your skin.

"You wanna do it?" You ask Midori, at the same time that you begin to pull off your own underwear as well. "You wanna do it right here? I don't mind, but we have to be quiet, because--"

Not long ago, you would've balked at the merest idea of doing something like this. You're not a fucking prude, that's much for sure, but there's limits to your bohemianism. Going around your old apartment in nothing but your underwear? Sure, it's your own fucking apartment. Actually fucking right inside your office, close to the door, where anyone passing could hear? You'd have shut down the idea with a glare and possibly an implied threat of kneecap loss or two back then.

Now, though...well. You're still that person, but someone who also wouldn't mind sneaking a bit of alone time before an operation. Fuck whoever overhears, you're Warmaster. You can do whatever the fuck you want! ...Just so that they know you're not Kharn!

"Eh? Quiet? But I don't--" Midori turns back to you, seemingly having been preoccupied with something earlier and only now just paying attention to you. Her own eyes widening as she catches your sports bra - and then blushing furiously as she sees you pull your panties down. "W-wait! Wait, sempai, I didn't mean it like that...!" She scurries forward, still reddening, and pulls your panties back up your thighs.

Huh? Then...what did she mean by it, then? You're more annoyed here than embarrassed. She can't just tease you and then leave you hanging like that--

"A bath! I...I drew sempai a bath!" Completely red now, the Callidus gestures towards your quarters, where a faint cloud of perfume-scented steam is slowly wafting through. "I wanted to help sempai relax before the operation, and since you haven't really taken a proper bath ever since you started waiting for Yuma-san to wake up, I thought..." She looks down at her now-twiddling thumbs.

...Oh. A bath. You blink at the direction of your quarters, and then back at Midori. That's...

You raise an arm and sniff an armpit, frowning. ...Well, you're not exactly fragrant, but at the same time you're not exactly putrid, here. Or is that just you?

"What? Oh, n-no, sempai! You're not...um, smelly!" Midori shakes her head furiously. "J-just, I thought it'd be nice for sempai to experience something like this for a change, and..." Her stuttering voice lowers here, into almost a fervent whisper. "...Maybe I can wash sempai's back, too...?"

Even with your disappointment, you can't help but notice that this means a lot to Midori.

How do you respond?

While a bath wasn't exactly what you expected, it's...not exactly a bad idea, either. Truth be told, you'd been feeling muggy and itchy underneath your costume since the second day of your vigil outside Yuma's Silent Room, and more than once you found yourself wondering if you could steal away for a second and sneak in a few minutes underneath a running shower. Just get a good scrub down before going back to work.

This shocked you right to your core, of course - before all this, showering was something you only did when people around you stopped being able to ignore how much you reeked of dried blood, rancid sweat and stale alcohol. This would usually take a good handful of weeks, and result in a good deal of complaining to Mami and Malal.

And depending on who was on hand to respond at the time, either you get cajoled into a shower to be lovingly hand-washed by a blonde goddess of victory, or bodily dragged to the Officio's subterranean parking lot and be hosed down painfully by a biker chick snickering behind her skulled helmet.

...The thing is, bathing hasn't really been your thing since recently, and you've never thought of it as something to be done for relaxation. But the more you think about it now, with you standing here half-naked in your own office, mere hours away from an operation where you may not come back alive - it seems like a good idea. The fact that your own half-naked Callidus is offering to assist you during it also helps, too.

So your response to her offer, then, is an awkward nod and an equally-awkward thanks - and this seems to jolt her out of her self-conscious reverie, her crimson eyes widening in time with her surprised, relieved smile. She holds out a hand, one that you gladly take - and she takes it as the signal that it is, leading you across the floor of your office, then into your quarters, and then finally into your bath.

The floral perfume-scent is strongest here, you note as you breathe in the comfortably-warm air inside your quarters' expensively-furnished bathroom. The source is clearly the drawn bath, the water clear and yet tinged with just a bit of green, but...hnh. Did she use something for the water? Some sort of bath perfume, or...?

"Bath perfume, sempai?" Midori blinks as she leads you into the shower, probably for the pre-bath rinsing. "Er...no, not really. I found some really expensive bath salts in the medicine cabinet, though, so I just used that." She smiles. "It does smell good, though, doesn't it?"

Yeah, it does. You nod as you divest yourself completely of your own underwear, something that you see Midori redden again at.

...What? She's seen you naked already, right? What's she got to be embarrassed about?

"I...um...it's not that, sempai, it's just--" Midori begins, before shaking her head. "N-nevermind. Um, if you'll just sit down here, then, sempai, we can start..."

You obediently sit down on the stool she pushes into position underneath you, wincing slightly as the cold wood makes contact with your bare skin. A moment later - and completely without warning - Midori turns a handheld shower nozzle on over your head, and the sudden deluge of ice-cold water is enough to make you loudly curse and shriek at the shock of it.

Your Callidus panics for about a second before profusely apologizing, holding the shower away from you but at the same time soaking herself in the process (and also making herself shriek at the surprising temperature).

This goes on for a couple of seconds until the both of you calm down enough to continue the rinsing - until finally, you get to the point where you've washed yourself enough that only your back is left untouched by soap. A duty that Midori had specifically asked for the pleasure of doing herself.

[2/3]

"Well, h-here I go, sempai. ...If, if I'm making you uncomfortable or anything, please say so and I'll stop, alright..?"

You nod and close your eyes, leaning forward slightly as you feel her soap-slick hands begin to move across your naked back. Her soft, warm fingers moving across the pebbled, striated network of scars etched across your skin. Each clumsily-healed mark a souvenir from a mission you've shed blood on but can barely remember.

...This is pretty comfortable. You can get used to having someone else wash your back like this.

"Am I doing okay, sempai?" Midori asks quietly, carefully, as she continues to lather up your back, at the same time giving you what feels like a very slow and very relaxing massage. Her soap-slickened fingertips kneading the soreness out of your muscles there - pressing here, rubbing there, making the tension melt away.

You grit your teeth as you suppress a sudden moan, your Callidus' fingers having found a certain spot of tension by your shoulder blades that, once pressed, made your knees go rubbery. ...Christ, she's good with her fingers.

Just as you make to reply to the positive, though--

+ Tell her that you want the works, Nameless One. + Dildoes' voice whispers in your mind. + She'll know what to do. It makes for a more relaxing experience that way. + She ends her whispered bit of unsolicited advice with a chuckle that didn't sound suspicious at all, no way.

How do you respond?

[]You're doing great, Midori.
[]...Give me the works, please.
[]Talk about something else.

You nod, deciding to go with Dildoes' advice for now.

"You're doing great," you murmur, and you see Midori's reflection smile on the wet polished tile wall beside you. "...but I'd like the works, please, Midorin."

At this, your green-haired Callidus freezes in mid-lather, eyes wide. "S-sempai...?"

"The works." You repeat, carefully, clearly. "Give me the works, Midori."

Silence. Absolute silence inside your bathroom, besides the occassional drop of water breaking the otherwise calm surface of the bath Midori had drawn for you.

Then, sensation. The sensation of Midori taking her hands off you, followed by the sound of wet cloth being shucked aside. More sounds - a brief splash of water upon skin, a shower gel bottle lid being popped open and then clicked shut a moment later, and then --

Softness. Just softness, dizzyingly warm, dizzyingly slick, pressing lovingly upon your shoulderblades before sliding down your back in a near-frictionless slide. Up and down, up and down.

Midori's arms wrapping around your waist, cinching around you in a gentle hug, more to keep herself pressed against you as she continued her motions than to keep you in place.

Her face buried against the nape of your neck, her breath tickling your ear, her own scent - a tantalizing combination of kiwi and the soap she was using to wash your back - filling your nostrils.

All of this combine into something you've never felt before, and if you'll be honest, something you don't really want to stop. Ever.

This is the works, then. This is what Dildoes recommended.

You may hate the way she talks down to everyone, and absolutely despise her style, but you can't deny that she does know her shit.

"Is...is this better, then, sempai?" Midori asks again, her voice made breathy - either by the situation or the exertion of it, you can't tell. All you know is that you're having your back lathered up by your Callidus using her generous physical endowments, and...well, she sounds like she's having fun.

You certainly are, in any case.

How do you respond?

You nod again, preferring to keep the moment from being spoiled by you talking. Midori sighs happily at this, clearly pleased - her arms tightening around you in a brief embrace before she continues on giving you the most memorable pre-bath rinse you've ever had.

The sensation of something so unbelievably soft and warm rubbing up and down your back, coupled by the luxurious lack of friction afforded by the body soap's thick lather...it's enough to send shivers down your spine and curl your toes, and you make no qualms of showing just how good - or how right - it feels.

It's so effective - no wonder Dildoes called it 'the works' - that it only takes a few minutes' worth of this treatment for you to be rendered helpless by it.

Your own breath sawing in and out of your lungs in feathery gasps, every fiber of your being so relaxed and at the same time so aroused to the point that it's all you can do to stop yourself from screaming for more. Even more when Midori suddenly stops in her movements, burying her face in your wet hair, her own body shivering as it presses against yours in a clinging embrace.

"I...I have to stop, sempai," Midori wheezes into your neck, her shoulders quivering. "C-can't continue. Otherwise, I'll...I'll lose control, a-and..." She lets the sentence hang between the both of you, although from how she's breathing she's probably just as affected by all of this as you are. Maybe even more.

+ This is your chance, Nameless One! + Dildoes cackles. + Victory is at hand! Take it! It's yours! +

How do you react?

[]Innocently ask. "...And what?"
[]Kiss her. Onwards, to a victory most worthy.
[]Gently bring this to a stop. This is a bath, after all. You can't enjoy a bath properly this way.

"Just...g-give me a moment to calm down, Sempai," Midori breathes. "Then, I'll start over, a-and--"

You shift on your stool, grab her by the shoulders, and kiss her before she could even react. Before she could even finish her half-stuttered, half-gasped sentence. Leaving her only time to throw her arms around your neck - and to pulse a single word of surprise across the connection you share - as you make your move.

+ Sempai +

She was telling the truth - she was only a hair's breadth from the precipice. Her lips open immediately as soon as they brush against yours, accepting you, accepting everything, allowing you to take the lead where she had been doing so moments before.

Midori moans into the kiss as it deepens, her eyes fluttering closed, and you feel her grow warmer underneath your touch. Her hands move from your shoulders and over your body, over your back - her fingers running over your scars, the soap lather from earlier making her hand slip over them as if the knobbly, pebbled evidence of your hard life never even existed. As if they were never even there.

Just as you begin to push this a bit further - your own hands making their way down Midori's waist - it's here that a sudden hellish beeping rudely fills the entire bathroom, shocking the both of you hard enough and jarringly enough that you both flinch out of each other's arms in alarm. Midori ending up shrieking as she falls back onto her ass, and you very nearly cracking your skull open against the tiled wall behind you.

What the fuck? What the FUCK is that? You growl as you pull yourself to your feet, glaring at the tiny speaker embedded on the bathroom wall. Did someone just sign their own fucking death warrant by beeping you through your fucking bathroom intercom again?

"N-no, I don't...I don't think so, Sempai," Midori murmurs, blushing furiously as she rises to her own feet, demurely pulling a towel around her. "I...um, I turned it off myself, actually, just for today." She gives you a sheepish smile, one tainted with disappointment, before disappearing underneath that professional look that you've seen her sport. "This is probably a bit more important, though. Can I run out to check for a bit?"

You blink at Midori for a few moments, before nodding. Anything to just shut that alarm up. And maybe...well, maybe continue where you left off, although you're not so sure about the chances of that happening. The mood feels...ruined.

Midori quickly steps out of the steamy bath, wiping her feet on the rug and then tiptoeing out to your office. You hear something being clicked open, and the beeping ceases - followed by a voice that could only come from one source. One miles away from here. One that you thought you wouldn't have to hear from till much, much later.

"Sempai?" Midori calls from your office. "It's Miss Valnikov! She wants to talk to you, and she says it's very important!"

...Dammit, Kharn. DAMMIT.

How do you respond?

[]Get over there and see what your accursed predecessor wants.
[]Tell her to end the call and get back to you. Bath time needs to be finished.

Blood and Iron: The Morticians - Chapter 1

"Wake up, my little Grimmy-grim~"

The room stank. That was the first thought that ran through Clare's mind as consciousness began to seep in. The smell of blood and shit and piss filled her nose and mouth. Each new inhale took in more of the odour, making her gag uncontrollably. Ragged coughs and wheezes shook her body against the restraints pinning her down. Her eyes shot open, then closed again as the light blinded her. She gagged harder, desperately trying to force the taste of corpse air out of her lungs.

"Oh! Whoopsies~!"

A hand lifted her head off of the operating table. Something snaked its way behind her head as a weight pressed down on the lower half of her face. There was a click and hiss as the the pressure on her face increased, sealing itself on. Clare gave one final, rauccous cough and the horrid stench was purged from her lungs, replaced with a familiar, relaxingly sterile taste of nothingness.

"Poor little Clare-bear," a soft, slightly-accented voice said overhead. Clare felt a gentle hand run through her hair. "How can I give you a good morning kiss with your mask in the way, hm?"

Again, she tried to open her eyes. The light was no less blinding the second time, or the third time, or the fourth. By the fifth try, she managed to squint through the brightness, catching the silhouette of a person against a circular light overhead. A handful of smaller coughs rattled her lungs - the aftershocks of the earlier fit.

Before she could even see properly, Clare grumbled, "Let me up."

The figure hovering over her looked away, its motion giving the impression of indignation. "No magic word, no thank you," the voice pouted. "You could at least give me that much!"

"Dankeschön," Clare muttered, her words rushed, "now let me up."

As details began to fill out, the other girl looked down at her with unearthly bright golden eyes. Her face was beautiful - uncannily so. Long eyelashes, almond-shaped eyes and a slender nose. It was always the eyes that seemed off, Clare thought. Too bright and shimmering, with the sort of unnatural allure that sets off fight or flight instincts. The eyes of a monster wearing a woman's face.

The girl wrinkled her perfect nose and pouted, then flashed a wry grin as she let out a soft giggle. Clare shivered against her restraints.

"Good girl," the girl replied in her sing-song voice, running her hand through Clare's hair one last time.

A loud thunk shook the table as the metal restraints pried themselves apart. Clare pulled herself upright, her naked skin peeling itself off the stainless steel table. The operating room was still darkened, lit only by the overhead lights. The surgeon had since busied herself wheeling tables and machinery out of the way, skipping and humming to herself as she did. It was a cramped chamber, perhaps only big enough for three or four people at the most. The walls were tiled with riveted steel plates, while the floor was made up of metal grates.

Clare pulled the IV from her arm, willing the slightest bit of magic to patch up the hole it left behind. After yanking off another handful of excess wires, she stretched, checking the seals of her respirator as she did.

Vindicare Clarimonde Isengrim (Clare or Grim to her friends) had served the Thirteenth Officio for three years, rising through its ranks to lead The Morticians, the most elite honour guard squad in the Officio. Standing nearly seven feet tall and packed with muscle from head to toe, Clare was a giant compared to most. After three years of genetic enhancements and organ transplants, her body had been converted into the perfect killing machine. Without the alterations, she would have been more than a match for any Rank Leader, but with them... she could very well have held her own even against a Warmaster.

Her surgeon - the young woman who insisted on wearing coats costing in excess of a thousand dollars even during surgery - was Carnicula Prima Wilhelmina von Klempt, and the Morticians' dedicated Apothecary. Originally from the Fourteenth Officio, Billie was contracted for an entire week before being transferred due to 'unsavoury, deviant practices'. At the moment, she wore a long, black lambskin coat in place of a traditional labcoat over a simple, pink button down shirt with most of the top buttons undone, and a black tie hanging loose and low.

The strangest feature of the doctor, however, was not her misplaced sense of style. Rather, it was the great whirring, multi-armed contraption that jutted from her back - the Chirurgeon. Various mechanical appendages reached over her shoulders, ending in drills, syringes, scalpels and various other tools that made Clare shudder. The device seemed to fuse into her back and spine, melding through her coat in a twisted amalgamation of flesh, machine and fashion.

"There we go, three lungs, just like I promised," Billie said, making a show of dusting off her hands. "Honestly, Grim-grims, even your body is picky about where your air comes from."

Clare shrugged. She couldn't help but run her thumb along the red line below her left breast that marked the incision site. The operation had been attempted at least three times before, but each time her body resisted the extra organ and almost killed her in the process. The Apothecary had spent months attempting to formulate an immunosuppressant that wouldn't be neutralized by her existing superhuman organs.

"Can I trust this one to last?" Clare asked.

Billie pouted, her cheeks puffing up as she planted herself firmly in Clare's lap and rested her head against the other girl's shoulder. "Honestly! Two hearts and you can't even spare a 'thank you' without being forced!" She teased. "Isn't it about time you stopped playing hard to get~?"

"Billie," the larger girl muttered, glowering down at the Apothecary.

Billie simply batted her eyelashes and stared into the Mortician's eyes, swirling a finger against her bare chest.

"Thank you for fixing me," Clare conceded, ignoring the invasive intimacy, "now get off."

"No~"

The Vindicare grunted as she stood, lifting Billie into the air without a second thought, despite the Chirurgeon's added weight.

"Aha!" Billie squealed, clinging onto Clare. "Just like a prince- ACK!"

The Apothecary cried out as Clare dropped her unceremoniously onto the operating table. With a momentary flash of light, the Vindicare's costume materialized around her - a black greatcoat with a bright red, oversized collar that stuck out past her shoulders and a pair of matching crimson gloves.

"I am grateful, but do not presume that I find your antics endearing," she growled at the giggling Venenum. Even through the respirator, the stilted syllables and awkwardly pronounced W's of her suppressed accent were apparent. With one hand, Clare picked her oxygen tank up off the ground and swung it onto her back, fastening the straps around her shoulders.

>>36040470
You're the lewdest, Decu.

>> ☐ archivalfag 11/08/14(Sat)15:08:30 No.36040553

"Cold and hard all the way through," the Apothecary murmured, giving her an inscrutably gentle smile. "Someday you'll have to soften up, Miss Iron Hound. I know there's a cute little puppy dog in there somewhere!"

Clare scowled harder. With her respirator, her eyes took on the burden of expressing her full range of emotion. They were always sharp and stern, and her irises blazed with an unnatural golden-orange sunset hue. She could have sworn they were simply brown before she had contracted to the Thirteenth.

Before she could formulate a response, the PA system overhead crackled to life. "Vindicare Isengrim and Carnicula Prima von Klempt to the meeting room," a male-sounding voice called out muffled tones. "Repeat, Vindicare Isengrim and Carnicula Prima von Klempt to the meeting room. Thank you."

"Come," Clare murmurred, tilting her head toward the door.

Billie obliged with a mischievous grin. By the time she hopped off the operating table, the Vindicare was already out the door and moving through the narrow halls of the MS Pulchritudinous.

The Vindicare's stride always held a certain air of grim determination, her leather gloves crackling as she balled her hands into fists. Billie, on the other hand, turned her chin up as she walked with all the elegance of a fashion model, her heels clicking against the linoleum and the Chirurgeon jingling and rattling behind her with every step.

There was a time when the Pulchritudinous was a proud, luxurious cruise liner, her halls bustling with wealthy patrons, but that era had come and gone long ago. Billie had purchased the forty-something year old ship for the measly sum of three million American dollars. She had affectionately referred to it as a 'fixer-upper' at the time. After two deaths, a dozen serious injuries and several times her original cost had been put into her, the ship had finally been deemed sea-worthy once again.

>> ☐ archivalfag 11/08/14(Sat)15:09:50 No.36040568

The lowest passenger deck - still retaining its original name, the Coral Deck - had been given over entirely to the small staff of Venenum on board. Billie's private quarters and laboratory took up much of the forward portside, while a dozen other private offices lined the starboard. Between them were the stairs to the Fiesta Deck, flanked by a pair of elevators.

Clare prodded the call button on the nearest elevator, then tried her best to keep Billie from clinging to her arm as they waited.

Across from the elevators, through a set of revolving doors, Clare could see into what had once been a lavish dining hall. Now, it held banks of consoles staffed by the many Venenum onboard, while tubes of life support fluid and the subjects contained therein were placed against the walls. As Clare mindlessly shook the Chief Apothecary off her arm for the umpteenth time, she couldn't help but try to see over the shoulders of the Venenum, curious about their work. Clare had never had a mind for it herself, but the results fascinated her nonetheless.

By the time the elevators rumbled open, the Vindicare had conceded to Billie's insistent skinship. The way she wrapped herself around the oversized arm reminded Clare more of a child than anything resembling a lover. Even still, Clare was thankful that her squad tended to steer clear of the ship's bowels whenever they could.

Horribly grating, bouncing music greeted them as they stepped inside - yet more of Billie's handiwork. Up the elevators rose through the decks, through Fiesta, Aloha, Riviera and Promenade. The journey to the bridge deck seemed to last an hour in Clare's mind, the Venenum at her side bouncing and shimmying to the elevator music. Eventually, at long last, the doors hissed open, freeing Clare from Billie's clutches.

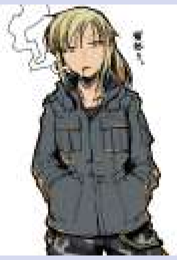
File: Joe1.jpg (207 KB, 579x819)



In contrast to the lower decks, the bridge deck (not bearing any festive title) was plain and utilitarian, with a black linoleum floor and cream-coloured walls. While the bridge itself was untouched, the captain's quarters had been modified into an official meeting room, complete with a long table, swivel chairs and perrenial coffee mugs.

There, leaning against the wall by the door, Clare spotted a woman with blonde hair pulled back in a loose ponytail, a smouldering cigarette between her lips. She wore no magical girl costume, instead sporting a grey jacket and urban camouflage pants. As she caught sight of the newly arrived pair, she waved a hand and smirked behind her cigarette.

"Yo."

"Joe," Clare said in monotone, snatching the cigarette out of the blonde's mouth and crushing it in a gloved hand. "I don't recall hearing your name being called."

Hailing from the Sixteenth, Vindicare Josephine Laurent had taken the position of Clare's second-in-command following the previous squad leader's departure. She was one of very, very few people that Clare trusted enough to call a friend.

"Ah, you know," the blonde laughed, her words coloured by a French accent, "I just thought I'd stop by and see what is 'appening. Must be important for them to call the both of you, no?"

Clare raised an eyebrow and gave the French girl a bemused smirk beneath her rebreather. "Suit yourself," she said, opening the door. "Come, then."

"So lenient?" Joe snickered as she followed after Clare. "You worry me, Grim."

As the three magical girls filed into the darkened meeting room, they found that the television at the far end of the table was already on. An incubator sat primly atop a wooden desk, looking much the same as many of his brothers, save for the pair of thick-rimmed glasses, a tiny necktie and a slightly curled tuft of hair between his ears. Behind him was a blonde-haired young woman, a stitched line running from the corners of her lips and across her face.

File: Fran1.jpg (128 KB, 700x850)

"Hi, Nigel~" Billie exclaimed before throwing herself into a chair and spinning around.

"Nigel," Clare said as she gave the incubator a nod. "Madaraki." Just a hint of venom coated her tongue as she said the second name.

"Ah, there you are!" The incubator said. "Good afternoon, Miss Isengrim, Doctor von Klempt! And, oh! I see Miss Laurent will be joining us as well!"

"Bonjour," Joe replied, taking her own seat.

Of the three, only Clare remained standing, her arms crossed, though none of the others seemed to find this unusual. Behind Fran Madaraki, she could recognize what appeared to be the captain's office onboard the SS Rafflesia. The Venenum took the Warmaster's seat with a certain implaceable ease that immediately put Clare on edge.

"Excellent! Now that everyone is gathered here, I suppose I'll right to chase," the incubator started. Despite being the head of the German-based Officio, he spoke with an unmistakable - if somewhat exaggerated - British accent. "There has been something of a, er, how shall I say, 'change of command' in the Officio. Erm, truth be told, I'm not entirely sure how to put this-"

The incubator was silenced as Fran placed a gentle, but firm hand on his head. "What Nigel meeeeans to saaaaay," she started, "is that as of, ooooh, one hour ago, Warmaster Strauss has been foooormally dismissed from the Thirteenth Officioooo."

"Ah?" Billie made a small, excited yelp, as though suddenly understanding. "Does- Does this mean that I- that my greatest is finally-"

"Erm, I'm sorry," Fran said, "but no. As of noooow, I have taken up the mantle of Chief Director of the Thirteeeenth!"

Silence reigned. Both sides seemed to be waiting for the other to speak first. Clare counted as her twin hearts beat thrice each before clearing her throat.

"Nigel," the senior Vindicare said, her voice carrying the same edge as a cocked gun, "is this true?"

>> ☐ archivalfag 11/08/14(Sat)15:13:59 No.36040635

"Yes!" He exclaimed, seemingly pulled from a trance. Nonetheless, his voice carried the same overly-enthusiastic tone as always. "Thank you, Chief Director! I couldn't have put it better myself! We thought it would be prudent to inform you, ah, 'in person' before the official memo goes out. An official inauguration will be held in the coming weeks. In the mean time-"

"There was," Clare interrupted, "a coup?" Something dark and four-legged seemed to flicker in the shadows behind her.

"'Coup' is an ugly word, but," Fran answered, "to be clear, yes. Things have happened, Clare. Doctor Strauss' atrocities have become known to the greater Officio community. You can not honestly have expected her not to face consequences."

"Chief Director Madaraki is quite correct, Vindicare Isengrim," Nigel added. "Should we have continued to support Doctor Strauss, I fear our Officio may have faced purgation! It is in our best interest to issue a firm denouncement of her practices and draft a reformed ethics policy in the wake of this incident."

"What THINGS have happened Madaraki?" Clare asked, her shadow stretching unnaturally again. "How did this get OUT?"

"ETHICS POLICY?!" Billie screeched, horrified.

"Doctor Strauss overreached her boundaries," Fran replied. Her expression was far more stoic and resolved than Clare had ever seen before. She almost respected it. "She kidnapped an innocent magical girl from the Ninth. Is that enough for you, Clare?"

"Why does SHE get to be Warmaster?" Billie asked, keeping a much looser hold on her emotions than the German Vindicare. "I've been a Prima for FOUR YEARS, DAMN IT!"

"Excellent question!" Nigel exclaimed. "In the interests of projecting a stronger, more ethical image, I have deemed Fran Madaraki to be the best choice for the position. Of course, I mean no personal offense! You are a wonderful scientist, Doctor von Klempt, but you can see where your ideals may cause conflicts of interest."

Billie's beautiful face twitched and shook, looking as though her veins were about to burst through her forehead. Before the Apothecary could say anything further, Clare raised a gloved hand. A faint, canine-sounding whimper echoed through the room as Clare's shadow settled.

"If," she started, her calm, detached aura having returned, "there are no further questions, I would like to speak with our new Warmaster alone."

She glanced at the others, her burning orange eyes fixating on Billie. The Venenum shook her head gently and stared down into her lap. The German Vindicare then nodded at her second, who had been conspicuously silent during the meeting. Despite not having said a word, Clare found herself immensely grateful that Joe had joined her for the meeting.

"Joe. Take the the Carnicula. Watch over her. Get a drink."

The other Vindicare clasped a fist over her heart as she rose. Joe tried her best to work an arm around Billie's shoulders, past the Chirurgeon, but it didn't quite seem to work. Instead, the Venenum wrapped herself around Joe's arm and leaned into her. Clare found a smile tugging at her lips beneath her respirator, musing on the similarity to her own situation just minutes ago.

As the door shut behind the pair, Clare turned back to find Fran shooing the incubator off of her desk. For a moment, the new Chief Director struggled to meet the Mortician's stare, but seemed to steady her resolve in short order.

"I'm not sorry, if that's what you're expecting to hear."

>> ☐ archivalfag 11/08/14(Sat)15:16:34 No.36040672

What was meant to be a snickered escaped Clare's lips as a sharp, loud bark of laughter. "Of course you aren't. You think the Doctor was a monster and yourself some gallant hero."

"I'm no hero," Fran corrected. "I'm just the one left to clean up her mess."

Clare shook her head, somehow finding herself smiling yet again. "And you'll do a terrible job of it. We both know that."

"Excuse me?"

"Tell me. Our Officio has, what? Four hundred? Five hundred Venenum?"

"Four hundred and eighty-sev- Eighty-six."

"And do you really believe that Doctor Strauss was the only one of her kind?"

"Not yet," Fran replied, smiling softly, "but I intend to change that."

"And how? Your 'ethics policy'?" Clare asked. "How do you plan to enforce that?"

"I- We-"

"Will you kill those that disobey? We both know you won't. Imprison them? For a magical girl, that might as well be a death sentence anyways."

"Banishment," Fran answered. "We will cut off their funding and disown them, just-" Her voice seemed to waver for a moment," just as we did with Doctor Strauss."

"You did what?" Clare asked, somewhat bemused at the revelation.

"We banished her," Fran repeated. "We- We left her in the city and disowned her."

The Vindicare smiled as something suddenly clicked inside her mind. "You left her in the city?"

"Yes, why?"

"And what of Protocol Ten?"

Clare had never seen someone turn so pale so quickly. The Chief Director's skin was almost transluscent. "How do you-"

"Warmaster- Apologies, 'Chief Director'," Clare laughed, "I spent four years working security in Varrigan. The last year was spent as the Warmaster's personal bodyguard. You thought I wouldn't know?"

"Are- Are you trying to tell me you would have told me, if I had let you in on the plan?"

"Don't be stupid," Clare said, "I would have hunted you down for treason."

"Then why would you bring it up?"

"I wanted to see what sort of expression you would make when faced with the consequences of your actions," Clare replied, as though it were simple common sense. "Even now, you know that killing me and purging this ship would be the smartest course of action, and yet you won't. For all you've done, Fran Madaraki, you don't have the stomach for what this job will make you do."

"And thaaaat is where we differ," Fran said. Hearing the German's words seemed to steel her and give her clarity, by the fact that her verbal tic had returned. "I wiiiill reform this Officiooo without getting my haaaands bloody. The Doctor Strausses of thiiiiis world are going extiiiiinct, Miss Isengrim. I woooon't ask for you to like iiiit, I oooonly ask for your respect and your loooyalty."

The Vindicare snorted as her own proud smirk faded. "To my death, I am loyal to the Thirteenth," she responded, her statement punctuated by the hissing of her respirator. "As long as you lead, I will follow. But until you can do what is necessary for this Officio's future, you will NEVER have my respect."

Fran let out a tired sigh, then shrugged. "I guess that's aaaaas much as I can aaaaask," she conceded. "There iiiiis one other thiiiing to cover before you goooo."

Clare simply grunted and cocked an eyebrow.

"I found yooouuu an Eversoooor to fill in your squuuaaad~"

"Go on."

"I made a liiiiittle deal with the Seventeenth aaaaand they offered one of theeeeirs," Fran explained. "Her naaaame is, um, let's see." The Chief Director paused to shuffle through a pile of papers in one of her desk drawers. At last, she pulled out the right one as Clare impatiently drummed her fingers on her bicep. "Veraaaa Rourke! That's her! I'll have her fuuuuull dossier emailed to you later todaaay. Their Warmaster says she was in liiiine to be Rank Leadeeeer! You'll haaave her by the end of the weeeeeek~"

The Vindicare nodded. "Will that be all?"

"I thiiiink so," Fran answered. Clare watched her for a moment before Fran caught herself. "Ah, sorry! Yooouuu're dismissed!"

Clare thumped a fist over her heart and nodded again. "Long live the Warmaster," she said.

"It's Chief Director noooow, remeeeember?"

"Mm," the Mortician grunted as she began to turn away. "So it is."

And that's all for this one! I hit a bit of a wall with PM, so I decided to get started on this earlier than I had planned. I hope you enjoyed reading the first chapter of Blood and Iron, and I hope it wasn't too light-hearted for today's extremely grim and noir thread.

Next time on Blood and Iron: The littlest Madaraki appears!

Trials of the Thrice-Cursed
Chapter 2-3: High Seas Slaughter

The smell of carrion was overwhelming.

I made my way inside the superstructure with a quick pace; eager to find the real target hiding inside. The scent of blood was strong as well, but it was starting to get overpowered by the scent of decay. It was such a waste... I could tell from those smells alone that the mastermind of this little play was a Magical Girl who had very little of "magical". She was a butcher, worse than me no doubt. Silke tagged behind me at a slower pace. I thought her suit might filter out at least some of the smell, but she seemed to be fairly affected by it nonetheless.

In all fairness, even if we Magical Girl are all familiar with death, it's usually deaths of small scale. Death within a barrier, death of a rival, death of by-standers, death of a friend. Sometimes entire squads may die, and that's all part of the life we've chosen.

This is not that life. This is carnage, one that very few ever get exposed to. The smell of iron and rot was so strong it spoke to me. It spoke of numberless corpses waiting ahead. It spoke to me of Deaths unneeded and Deaths in torment.

"Silke, you can turn back if you want. It's going to become even worse, a lot worse." I broke the silence with a serious voice.

"What are you talking about?" she didn't stop, instead quickening her pace to catch up with me. Thanks for the headache by the way. "I-I'm fine, really! I was just... a little surprised that's all, I wasn't hurt anywhere I swear!"

That was the kind of things I could recall rookies saying when they really were injured and were trying to hide it or play tough, but her suit didn't have any damage so I could tell she wasn't lying. For all the obfuscation of that tinted visor and distorted vox-caster, sometimes I felt like the Culexus could be an open book. She was a bit naive, and yet not... It was strange and difficult to explain, but it was why I felt compelled to shelter her from the hell she was going to see if she continued.

"I wasn't doubting you or your abilities." I continued. "It's just that I know what's waiting ahead, kinda, and it's not the kind of things I think you want to see."

"A truckload of corpses yes, it does not take a genius to figure it out." Her voice seemed to be tainted by a little exasperation and a good measure of sarcasm, taking me by surprise a bit. "I am not a kid." she then stated flatly before turning her head away slightly. "I-I know I won't like it... but I can't just.. let you shoulder it all alone. That's why I have to be here!"

I blinked, finally understanding and breaking in a small smile. Not a crazy smile, not a bloodthirsty smile, just a genuine, warm smile. She was a good girl and I'd just have to deal with it. She barely knew me, fuck she most likely had more reasons to want to be -away- from me than otherwise, but yet she was steadfast in wanting to be there and help. I couldn't help but feel like despite how naive it was, it was also a little admirable.

I ripped open one of the nearby, smaller doors by shoving my left claw into the joint and pulling, tearing it off its hinges in the process. What may one day have been a cafeteria was no longer fit to serve this purpose. All the furniture had been shoved to the walls and the entire space had been covered in bodies and vitae. I flinched when the smell hit my augmented nose. I think the fact that I was used to this smell was the only thing that prevented me from puking my guts out from how strong and foul it was. Silke was having a similar reaction, but managed to hold as well, probably due to the air filtration I assume her suit has.

I moved in first while she remained stunned at the sheer charnel. A quick look gave my worst suspicions much more weight. The bodies were all disparate with no obvious common factor of age, gender, or social class, but they had all been killed in the same way; ritual sacrifice with some sharp object, probably a knife. And it wasn't clean deaths either, no quick deaths. They had all been stabbed and sliced in ways that they would die slowly, bleeding out as much and as long as possible.

"W-what is this... " I heard Silke whisper with a hint of fear and horror. No matter how much I would have tried, even I couldn't have remained unaffected by this either. From my gut feelings, those were all random innocents who had nothing to do with this. "Who.. why would anyone do something like this?" the Culexus' voice choked a little. "There's... no reason.. no logic... so why?"

I moved in with a rising feeling, a hunch. I walked through the pooled up crimson and the twisted mass of once-flesh, making my way to the center. I cleared the center of the room with my feet, trying to make some space to see the ground underneath and I froze. It was just as I suspected.

+Stop being so silent! You're creeping me out!+ I flinched visibly and turned back, the stabbing Pulse forcing my attention. Silke continued with a calmer tone and looked over, perhaps considering if she wanted to attempt heading over to my position. "You know something about this don't you?"

I nodded lightly and reached down, picking up the source of my suspicions and showing it to her. Between my skeletal fingers I had found three completely blood-stained Grief Seeds.

"..." The little German remained silent for a moment and I looked back down, giving one last look to the small piece of floor I could examine, kicking some more once-flesh out of the way and scraping the blood-paint away with my free claw. "Some sort of runes, Barrier-like." I announced as I stood back up.

Silke took a deep breath and seemed to steel herself, desperately clinging to calm "So... what.. does it mean?" I made my way back to the doorway, bloodied Grief Seeds still held in my left hand.

"I can only speculate, but from what I can observe; those are 'dormant' and were 'fed' the agony of all these people. All their fear, their regrets, their despair, their dying thoughts, used in some kind of... fucked up ritual. I'm willing to bet it's what brought those Daemon-familiars into the real world earlier."

Silke nodded slowly, trying to take it all in. I put the Grief Seeds in my Inventory for further study and made to reach out for a pat on her shoulder, but ultimately thought better of it when I factored in that my hands were stained with much blood. "Who.. who do you think could so something like this? I... we have powers of our own... we don't need this... so why would anyone go to such an extent?" Her voice was trembling now, but I couldn't tell if it was from shock or hatred. I secretly wished it was hatred, because that's what boiled in my blood at that point too.

"Someone who doesn't really understand what they're dealing with." I stated with a sigh and made my way outside. "Come, we don't have much time left."

"Until what?" the German Culexus quickly followed me, most likely more than eager to leave that necropolis.

We quickly made our way to what we assumed to be the bridge, only to find it underwhelmingly empty. At least the stench of rot wasn't there anymore so my nose stopped suffering. We searched the bridge for a minute and found out it wasn't as empty as it first looked. I sensed a presence and found a young man hiding in a hollowed out compartment, quivering in fear. He let out a scream when he saw me and started begging, so I turned back to Silke for opinions.

"...There's already been too much killing... he doesn't seem like a threat so.. just.. leave him alone..." her voice trailed off a little, seeming tired again. I looked back to the young man with a straight face and told him to shut the fuck up. He did. I then asked him what the fuck he was doing here. He answered.

Apparently this guy was a member of the pirate crew, but he went into hiding when their bosses came and asked everyone to follow them for a meeting. He had heard what had happened to the prisoners - because he admitted that the people down below were captured by them - and had been completely freaked out ever since. He said he never wanted to kill anyone and thought they would be used for a ransom or something. His voice was frantic, broken, as if trying to blurt out apologies and atonement at the same time as information.

The guy seemed way over his head, having joined with the crew for promises of wealth and adventures. It was all supposed to be fun he said. It was all supposed to be 'magical' he said. He seemed broken enough by the experience that a magical girl in the same state would have already Witched Out, but he seemed like just your average guy lured by false sweet words. For a moment I wondered if any of the others I mercilessly killed outside had been the same, but I chased away the thought as soon as it came.

Never again. I can't think like that anymore.

"From how he's describing it, I think it confirms our suspicions to the presence of a Callidus." Silke spoke softly, mitigating the distortion of her Vox-caster somewhat for a reason I couldn't quite grasp. "She must have used her abilities to charm and suggest her way into commandeering this ship and gaining more followers." the young man looked up, confused but trying to follow. "Just stay here for now, we will take care of everything." she reached down and gave him a small pat.

"I have a bad feeling about this, we need to get going." I insisted firmly, not fond of Silke wasting her time like this.

"You have been having those ever since this mission started." she responded with a small sigh.

"And things have been fucked since this mission started." I rolled my eyes and countered.

"You have a point." She finally conceded.

The man hailed for us to wait and told us the location of the meeting, earning a small thank from the little German. I just moved on ahead.

On our way down to the cargo hold, the German Culexus got closer and asked me a few questions with an uncharacteristically cold tone. "Why do you look like you know more than you let on? You've been facing this kind of things before haven't you? I'd.. like to believe that rather than the alternative."
==[6/10]

"Then believe what you want to believe." I simply responded without slowing down. The tension between us rose sharply, I could sense it; her distrust, her hostility.

"I can't believe it." she spat with disdain.

"Don't take me wrong." I remained calm, focusing on the objective. "I never did anything like this, even if I was part of a group like this before. I was low on the ladder, didn't really know what the fuck I was doing at the time. It was before I contracted; a really long while ago."

There was a silence, a heavy, unpleasant one. "Fine, I'll believe you for now, then what are they?" Silke inquired with a voice that meant to be uncompromising. I wasn't exactly intimidated, but then again I knew better than to fuck with her since what she did to me back at Suzume's place.

"Witch Cults" I said coldly and she repeated it in disbelief. "There's a variety of them all with their own creeds, but all of them are obsessed with Witches. Some of them think they're some sort of higher power, whether for good or bad - that's mostly the human ones - and then there's Witch Cults who think they can gain power by messing with the natural order of things - that's usually the ones Magical Girls get seduced by."

"And you think we're dealing with one of the later?" The Culexus' voice softened lightly, apparently satisfied with my quick explanation. I responded with a firm affirmative and she continued. "And... what... kind were you in.. back then?"

I shook my head, we were almost at the cargo bay. "I'll tell you that when we get back. We're almost there." the sound of screams suddenly rose up. Panic, betrayal, anger, frustration. All punctuated by gunshots.
==[7/10]

>> ☐ Zweihart 11/08/14(Sat)15:28:10 No.36040871

I detonated the gate to the cargo bay with a quick application of volatile doombolts and entered right through the gap in the same moment. What I saw there was enough to get my blood to seethe again. They were killing their own followers. Slicing them like pigs for another sacrifice. The floor was covered in blasphemous runes and the blood was already flowing strong, but it was too late.

It was too much. The smell of blood was too strong, and because of the freshness, the smell of carrions hadn't been growing yet. I didn't need to call upon Empyrean energies this time, my body was already moving on its own; guided by the hunt, guided by the hatred. The hatred became all. The hatred is everything.

I didn't even have time to see what Rank the first was. She spotted me from the corner of her eye but it was too late. By the time she had turned to face me my left claw had already tasted blood, sinking into her neck and pulling sharply. Red. Everything was red. The broken body of the cultist snapped and fell down, the knife it had been holding hitting the floor first.

The second one had quicker wits and attacked me the second I closed in on the first. She wielded a sword of some description and managed to score a cut to my side, but it mattered little. I knew no pain when those feelings overwhelmed me. A slice just wouldn't cut it, she needed to sever wholesome to have a chance.

But she wouldn't get it. I had already forced her on the defensive and my claws harassed her blade with murderous glee, gnawing at her body a little more with every opening and every parry that was just a bit too slow. It was a fellow Eversor all right, to be able to survive this long. It was also a driven one all right, to be stomaching the pain and strain with a smile. But it was also a forsaken one all right, to be facing me in such a place.
==[8/10]

>> ☐ Zweihart 11/08/14(Sat)15:29:16 No.36040879

The arm fell down first and I could feel more fresh blood warming up my fingers, washing away the old blood that was already there. The chest came second, feeding the senses of my other claw as it tore through. I cared not for the Soul Gem and turned to kill the last, only to find her body already fallen and Silke standing next to it, giving the final blow.

Finally, my blood cooled down and settled. There was a number of so-called pirates still alive as we had stepped in during their execution, but they were too shaken to do anything now. My breath was heavy as senses returned to me; not from physical exhaustion, but from mental exhaustion.

"H-hey.. are.. are you fine? you're.. you've got a strange look." The Culexus hazarded with a cautious tone, as if she was worried her voice alone might trigger another outburst of violence from me. I couldn't blame her really; this wasn't me anymore... I hadn't let myself get overtaken by rage like this in a very long time before... Well, before the world changed. "I'll be fine now..."

Warbringer... my right hand grasped slightly at the hilt that wasn't there, longing for its presence. My partner, my friend. The weapon, as ill-omened as it was, had helped me remain stable. Without it I felt like I could lose control again like this with little provocation. I hoped I was just being too pessimistic.

Silke walked closer to me in silence and looked at me from behind that opaque visor of her. I was so sure she was judging me right now; maybe looking down on me. Most likely all she would see from now on was how I fought and what I used to be part of. She--

"You did good." she reached out a hand, her voice calm and level as usual. I blinked. "Let's head back."

I was stunned for a moment, only managing to mutter a small "alright". She made to leave but I spoke up. "Wait, how do we know it's over." She didn't stop.

"I know, I read it from her."

I blinked. "Read? what? and the Soul Gems?"

She shook her head. "The people they manipulated will have their justice."

I didn't need to look around to realize this was true. The surviving "pirates" were getting back to their feet and they would surely take their revenge against those "cult leaders". Most likely they would finish them off while they were vulnerable. It was no longer our concern; the cargo was safe.

We made our way back to our original ship and the engines started back up after I destroyed the ramp connecting the two vessels, both of which began to limp back to their respective port with what little remained of their crew - although thanks to Silke ours sheltered a lot more survivors.

Mercy Killing 2: Mirror, Mirror

The clang of metal. A stern lecture, peppered with a few choice insults, and a quiet whimper in answer - her sister always had been a little too harsh - as she stood to the side of it all, showing both encouragement and concern in turn for both parties. In some ways, obviously excepting the weapons, it was just like their old home.

The three Katayamas - Mizuki, as well as her sister Mitsuko - had spent the bulk of their days in the orphanage known as the Mitakihara Children's Home, occasionally known as the Second Chance Institute. Like almost every orphanage, hospital and the like in the area, the Third had a heavy hand or investment in it if not outright ownership. As Harumi would always explain, it was an expression of Sanbey's generosity, his eagerness to help the weak and helpless around him, as shown by how those were often the first he would approach to grant wishes. It held up well enough, with everything he had done. They were prime examples themselves.

They could never quite remember what brought them to the orphanage, and by and large, did their best to keep it that way. It was too early in their lives to recall, and there was nothing to be gained from learning a now-irrelevant portion of the past. They might have clung to it if their lives had been bitter, but - and really, this only underlined the incubator's generosity - the Mitakihara Children's Home was nothing like the nightmarish institutions that dotted fiction at every turn. It was, indeed, a pleasant enough place to live out their years, and Harumi herself had regularly come to inspect the premises, as well as bringing gifts or sweets for the children there.

As much as they had liked it there, when Harumi came to offer them a chance for their own home - they would, at first, be staying at her house before taking a dormitory at the Third - they were all too eager to accept. Eventually, after much needling, they managed to drag the answer out of her, reluctant as she was, as to just what it was that she did. Too modest, much too modest. A magical girl of the Third Officio, as they discovered. Helping the incubator on his quest to save the universe from its eventual fall by creating all the hope they could in the world. Hunting witches and doing Sanbey's work throughout Mitakihara. What could be more noble? What could be more exciting?

She relented, after a few days of begging, and agreed to talk to Sanbey about the matter. They were, of course, overjoyed when they heard that they would be allowed to take a contract. In their eagerness, a wish had been more or less secondary, a formality that they could think of no adequate answer for, not after one wish had already been granted. A selfish wish seemed somehow... inappropriate, given the circumstances, and so they had decided.

Mizuki would bring happiness to those around her - after all, wasn't that what this was all about? - while Mitsuko would help others reach their true potential. It wouldn't do, after all, if they were anything short of flawless in their work for such an important cause. And so they-

Oh. Oh dear. This was all going a little too far.

[2/7]

The girl in the orange dress - their latest... friend? Pupil? It was something like that - was bleeding from a few gashes, the few that hadn't been cauterised by burning light. Slashes from... what was Mitsuko using, now? Some sort of wrist-mounted disc launcher. She always found the strangest things. Crying, too, but not from the injuries. Must have been something her sister had said.

"That's enough, I think." Her voice rang out across the training room, gentle but insistent, and the two stopped immediately: One lowering her arm, and the other a plain, unadorned broadsword. It seemed a bit silly, a Vanus helping to teach an Eversor in combat, but that was seniority for you. Practice could make such a great difference, her sister had experience aplenty in combat; if she wasn't being deployed for interrogations, Mitsuko was generally on the front lines.

Or finding someone to fuss over, as was the case here. But then, that was a mutual obsession of theirs, in a way.

"There, there. You both did well. Don't listen to Mitsuko TOO much, now," she cautions with a look towards the Eversor. "She's always been a bit too... well, you know." But not wrong, never wrong, when it came to picking out the flaws of those around her. Some said the sisters' wishes had changed their nature, in some way. How could it have? They were only doing what they could to help people, it was an absurd claim.

She glances across the hall, and smiles as she catches the eye of the third Katayama sister. "No one's too hurt, right? I think we need to stop here for now, then." The Eversor beamed at the praise - it was, for a new recruit, in rather low supply - and gratefully received the bandages offered to her by Mizuki. She would then thank Mitsuko, the elder of the two, as she was showered with a caustic litany, a list of every flaw in her style and reflexes alike that left nothing unexposed. It was her own sort of kindness, Mizuki liked to think. ...Though the other girl's voice was shaking a little, by the end.

The Katayamas made a rather contrasting pair even in appearance. Mitsuko in a yellowish dress that shone with sometimes-blinding golden light and a soul gem to match, offset by blue eyes and flowing purple hair. Mizuki dressed in drab colours topped, in costume, by what amounted to a grey raincoat, and a soul gem once again in the same colour, with warm dark eyes covered over by blonde hair as the sole splash of colour. ...The hair was dyed on both counts, but that could be their little secret. Everyone seemed to take it in stride anyway. Mitsuko was trivial enough to pick out at a distance, while Mizuki had a certain tendency to blend in even mid-conversation. Truth be told, it was how they both liked it.

A pat on the head and some murmured reassurances later, their latest student - for the life of her, Mizuki couldn't remember her name - had calmed down somewhat, ready to proceed. The Callidus was all too happy to prepare and set the stage, though she would never dream of taking it herself. It just wasn't her place. Instead, she pulls out a pair of folding chairs and brings their violin cases over, along with a bottle of water each. It was the little touches that made the difference. Goodness knew all the shouting left Mitsuko's throat dry, if nothing else.

"I can only assume by the noise that you're attempting to strangle a cat," came Mitsuko's dry, even-voiced objection before long. Clearly weary of the company and all that it brought.

"I-is... is it really that bad?" Stammering a little, she really was a nervous one. It must have been the way they were the first to come to her when she joined the Third that made her scramble for approval like this. At least they were here to help, as always.

"I can promise that your music touched my soul," in a voice as dry and cold as a mausoleum. There was that smile again, all the same.

"Really?"

"If only to drag it into hellish, burning misery." She grabbed the Eversor's hand in hers, adjusting its position and moving the bow herself by way of demonstration.

"That... really hurts-"

"Would you play better with a broken hand, I wonder? At least it would be quieter." Oh, there she went again. That was the cue to step in, surely.

"I didn't think it was that bad, Mitsuko." What could be, really? ...Though it certainly wasn't an instrument that took kindly to a lack of skill, she knew that.

"You don't think much at all." The quips never really meant anything between them. Part of the ritual, part of the... well, calling it a show seemed wrong, somehow. Their dynamic, in a way. It helped to make all this come together, anyway.

"Do you really need to be that blunt about it?"

"Always." ...Well, of course.

>> ☐ Malal 11/08/14(Sat)15:44:21 No.36041129

A while longer, and the lesson comes to a close, amidst comforting words and smothering praise that sends the Eversor scampering back to her quarters with renewed glee and a touch of fear. She would redouble her efforts now that her mistakes had been exposed, no doubt, and Mizuki's encouragement would save her from breaking. ...Not everyone could take it, despite their best efforts, but surely it was for the best. They were only helping others bring out the best in themselves. With each one holding the third Katayama in one hand, they made their way towards their quarters for the night.

"You weren't quite that mean when you were sparring earlier."

"That was a matter of life and death. This is a hobby."

"...So?" She was a hard one to understand, sometimes.

"So it matters to her personally. Holding back would be cruel."

...She was a kind one, in her own way. Not many realised just how much she cared, and that seemed to be how she liked it, but in Mizuki's eyes the Vanus would always be a warm-hearted guide. There just wasn't any other way to look at it. Still, she knew better to press the point, and so they walked into their dormitory together. Spartan furnishings aside a few scattered snacks and books. They lived most of their days away from it, in the company of others, and never bothered to use the room for much more than sleep. Well, sleep and keeping a few essentials, speaking of which...

Setting down her compact mirror, Mizuki watches as it turns from a circle to a square, then grew to a full-sized mirror leaning on one wall. A minor enchantment that she was, to this day, rather grateful for. She simply couldn't bear to go without it, after all, and Mitsuko was no different. It meant the world to them, though so few knew it. The looks they would get were... well, strange indeed. An hour later, when the two were almost asleep, it would start.

An insistent tapping. Knocking. Irregular, sometimes emphatic and at other times half-hearted, a hand against glass. It had become habit, over the years, to look up at the window to spot the source. The lack of a window in their room certainly simplified this part, at least. Instead, with a faint smile to contrast the frown in the bunk above, she looks over at the mirror and smiles to the third of the Katayama sisters. She always had been a loud one.

"Shh, it's late now. I'll talk to you tomorrow, don't worry."

Magical Scribe Eleanor Slam versus Magical Mermaid Miss St. Maur

Aches and pains ache and pain a lot less in costume. That's one advantage of being a magical girl, I suppose. Unfortunately, being a magical girl tends to get you injured a lot, so it kind of evens out.

But the hurting's gone down to a tolerable level now, so there's nothing to distract me from combat practice - other than the fact that I dread combat practice. Well, I dread just about everything they come up with for training here, and haven't really fought anything since Fuckerfly, but I haven't gotten the itinerary for the rest of the day's activities. The grueling workout near the end doesn't count.

…Fuckerfly is still okay, right? They keep saying she's fine, but I haven't seen her in quite some time. Then again, I haven't been on the rooftop since I wrecked her stuff, so maybe she's just staying there.

Anyway, this is still better than paperwork. I actually don't want to die here, so it counts as an improvement.

Well, here's the place I'm supposed to fight at. The entrance to the same training hall that Fuckerfly fought me at. Same set of double doors that Kai opened for me last time.

I just realized I've been seeing a lot of double doors around the Officio. And they're big ones, too. Like, big enough to fit an elephant through. The implications make me shiver.

I push open the doors into the well-scarred training hall.

…Shit. It's that giant, spider-legged fishbowl with the plastic castle inside. I hadn't been chased around by it in a while, so I was hoping that it was gone. Apparently that's not the case.

Who even builds shit like that, and –why-?

And then everything goes dark as somebody covers my eyes from behind. The smell of perfume is just barely there, but I recognize it. And it fits her M.O., so…

"Miss Suzi, please let me go," I drone tiredly. Don't want to deal with this shit today.

"Heyyy, how'd ya know it was me?" an annoyingly chipper voice calls out behind me. "Was it because our hearts are connected~?" Ew. No.

"Spider sense," I mumbled. Shit, shouldn't encourage her.

Spider Cunt removes her hands, allowing me to see again. "Ihihihi, not bad, not bad," she praises. The lady walks into my field of vision, wringing her hands and looking at me through half-lidded eyes.

"So," I say after a bit, "other than making me uncomfortable-" Don't give me that look, it can't be that hard to act normal - "why're you here?"

Spider Cunt stops pouting and puffs up with pride. “Why, I’m yer proctor for today, Elly,” she informs me, adding, “yer chaperone.”

“Oh.” I guess I can’t get rid of her.

Somebody's climbing out of the weird fishbowl thing. So I’m not fighting the fishbowl. It’s another… Another flesh and blood person. Fuck.

“Mm?” Spider Cunt murmurs.

“I don’t want to…” I plead, gesturing towards my opponent, “you know… Don’t wanna have to murder someone like that again.” Or get murdered, I guess. I shouldn’t assume I’m going to win. I'm probably going to get my ass kicked, but still...

The creepy girl’s lips twist into a creepy grin. “Then allow me to deliver the good news for ya,” she explains, putting her arms behind her back and rocking on her heels. “Today’s combat exercise is just best two outta three rounds.”

“…So no overkill necessary, right?” I ask hopefully.

“Not necessary, nope!” Spider Cunt assures me, but her expression’s darkening. “Though I don’t know if yer opponent will abide by that,” she adds.

…Fuck. I’m going to get ripped apart, aren’t I?

Spider Cunt places her hand on my shoulder and… I think she’s trying to look reassuring.

“I’ll make sure she doesn’t overdo it, Elly,” she tells me with confidence. “Promise.”

I don’t know if I can trust her on that, but I nod my head anyway.

Suzi takes a couple steps back and takes out the box with the cushion I saw last time. “Now I’m gonna need ya to put yer soul gem in this box here,” she explains, as if I’d forgotten.

“Please don’t touch it,” I implore her as I set the shining blue gemstone onto the cushion.

Suzi’s giggling does nothing to reassure me. I don’t think I have a choice in the matter, though.

My opponent, dressed in what is unmistakably a white wedding gown, is bent forward like she's ready to spring on me.

I glance towards the exits, but both of them are blocked off with fucking SPIDERS and spiderwebs. I'm stuck here, then. Great.

“Noooo chickenin’ out, Ellyyyy~,” Suzi calls out from a few feet away. Meanwhile, my opponent - let's call her Fish Girl - is stumbling around on her feet like a drunk. She leers at me with slight smile, one eye concealed by her hair. Looks kinda tired. Maybe I lucked out.

Fish girl slowly lifts her arm and waves at me. I awkwardly wave back. It makes her smile a bit wider. Not sure if I should be happy about that or not.

“Alright, are both of ya ready?” Suzi bellows out. Right, I need my weapon. It's like conjuring a normal pen, but you think bigger and meaner.

I open my metal hand wide, then close it around the tall object that just appeared. Can't say I like the whole 'pen spear' thing that much, but it gives me some distance from Fish Girl. I nod my head to Suzi, and my opponent-

Oh fuck me, she's got a spear too. Or is that a harpoon? Fuck.

“Threeeee, twoooo, ooooone…” lilts Suzi, before she yells out “go!” The creepy spider girl then scrambles away from us.

Okay, I can do this. Just have to stick the pointy end in her twice and we'll be done here...

But I'm scared. Holy crap I'm scared. She’s poised like a predatory fish about to go in for the kill, and her bemused, unflinching expression is -not- helping. My blood's frozen cold and my feet won't move any closer to her.

Fish Girl cocks her head before slowly advancing towards me, spear thing held firmly in both hands. Her dizzy movements don't make me feel better about my chances anymore. I end up taking a step back, and then another, and another - my legs shaking the entire time - until I've broken out in a run and reached the nearest wall.

“Exactly!” I spit, back against the wall.

“Ihihihi, don’t be so nervous," Spider Cunt teases me. "It’s not even yer first time~.”

Easy for you to say. Your innate creepiness probably gives you some immunity to this sort of scare tactic.

Without thinking, I move up and cock my arm back, and then hurl my pen spear straight at her. The weapon remains unnaturally straight in its flight, screaming towards Fish Girl as she makes no attempt to dodge out of the way.

Okay, in retrospect, that wasn't the smartest thing to do. But I still didn't expect her to deflect it out of the air with her own spear. The pen spins away and clatters some distance behind her before rolling to a stop.

Before I can make another one, Fish Girl changes her grip so her right hand is empty. She flicks it over her head, and just as quickly pulls it down and points in my direction. Dozens, maybe even hundreds, of tiny, silvery objects fly out and rocket towards me. I try running, but more of those things flying towards me cut off my escape. I crouch down and put up my arms to shield myself - robotic arm first, hopefully it'll take the brunt of whatever hits me.

>> ☐ Attarou 11/08/14(Sat)15:52:29 No.36041293

The silver objects streak by, a couple of them just grazing me. The attack seems to have stopped, and Fish Girl is doing something else with her free hand. I should probably move again, but curiosity gets the better of me, and I stand to look around and see what became of the projectiles.

Embedded in the walls and floors - the walls and floors made of goddamn sheet metal - are hooks. Lots and lots of metal fishhooks, with a very fine, almost invisible string attached to each hook. A fishing line.

Fish Girl tried to pull me in with fishing line. The fuck.

This seems like a good time to escape and try again, until Fish Girl reels herself in, hurtling towards me so fast she's fucking -flying-. I don't even have time to put my arms up again before her hips slam into me.

I'm knocked into the wall and bang my head before I slump to the ground in pain. Suddenly the aches from this morning don't seem so bad in comparison. Fish Girl towers over me, spear poised to strike. I'm able to bring my arms up, but I'm in prime head-skewering territory right now. I force my eyes shut, not wanting to see it coming.

There's a light tap on my head, and then a shuffling noise. I bring my arms down and look, and Fish Girl is slowly walking away, fish tail sticking out of the bottom of her dress.

She has a fish tail. I should have guessed.

“And that’s one point against ya, Elly," Suzi calls out from nearby. Oh sure, don't bother to help me stand up. I try to do so on my own, but stumble even more than Fish Girl. Moving my legs hurts too much now, though I don't think I'm bleeding. I make the pen from before disappear, then summon another one. I use that one as a cane and stagger back towards Fish Girl, who's still giving me a eerie smile. She's still got one of her hands free.

Oh shit.

I don't get any chances to dwell on this before there’s a tugging at my clothes, followed by my skin being pierced by a fresh shower of sharp hooks. I manage to avoid screaming in pain by instead emitting a loud, agonized groan. The tugging from before is MUCH stronger, and I'm yanked off my feet as the hooks dig deeper, dropping my spear. Now it's me hurtling through the air, with the hooks ripping at my body. My robot arm's not snagged, but it's still wrapped up tight enough that I can't move it.

...Fuck, this hurts. This hurts worse than Fuckerfly's attacks did. Much worse.

And now, being deposited in front of Fish Girl, I'm reminded of that screaming witch that tried to bite off my head. The screaming witch that was me. The screaming witch that would have succeeded if Fuckface and Checkers hadn't been there to intervene. I look pleadingly at Suzi, who's just grinning at me and not lifting a finger to help, like it's some kind of game to her. Fuck you too, Spider Cunt. I knew you were just a goddamn sadist from the start.

...Well, I'm not going to die without my soul gem being crushed, but I don't think it's going to tickle when I get cannibalized. And I'm not going to pretend there's any other way this will end for me.

I look back to my captor and loudly plead, “just make it quick!” She nods, her grin widening, and raises her spear up high. Ready to skewer me from head to toe. Again, I squeeze my eyes shut, bracing myself for the worst. For what good it'll do me. I don't know how it feels to be impaled, but it probably hurts enough that no amount of preparation can help you.

...I think I'll just tell the Warmaster that I can't do it. I'll just tell her I can't do this shit. It's too much. I can’t fight witches, I can’t fight magical girls, I can’t do anything...

Something sharp taps my head a few times, as a soft voice slowly drawls, “I caught you… Eleanor.”

...Wait. I know that voice.

“Victory goes to Miss Marina St. Maur!”cheers Suzi, who tells me, “gotta do better than that next time, Elly~.”

“…Huh? Marina?” My eyes snap open and I look at Fish Girl again. There’s no way. The hair is different, and the attitude was different, and… Well, they walk similar, and she’s got a sharktooth necklace like Marina, and same red eyes, but there’s just no way. There’s no fucking way this is possible. Marina was –nice-. Actually –nice-. Not pretend nice like Fuckerfly, but nice in the way that there’s no way she’d skewer me with a whole bunch of hooks.

“Thank you for earlier,” Fish Girl tells me. “Those snacks… They were delightful.” The hooks and fishing line all disappear at once, and I’m free to shiver and bleed out. Fuck, it is her. I got suckered into trusting somebody again.

“Oh? Ya know each other?” Suzi queries.

“I shop where she works,” Fish Girl replies. “Helpful girl. Very friendly.” Her words are starting to sound really condescending now. Or maybe they’ve been like that all along.

Fuck. I can’t trust anybody here, can I? This is ridiculous. This is absolutely ridiculous. I try to stand up again, noticing dozens of little red spots on my costume where I’m bleeding, and glare at Fish Girl. I want to give her a piece of my mind, but I’d just get my ass kicked if I did that.

Fish Girl is rifling around in her inventory for something, and pulls out an unopened box of chocolates that she got from the store. Ripping it open, she daintily holds up a piece and smiles at me. “Say ‘aah’.”

“Wha-?”

Marina sticks one of the wafers in my mouth, and I instinctively chew it. While the healing power of fudge and coconut washes over me, she hands me the rest of the box. “You forgot these,” she chides. Which was true – I wanted to pick up a box earlier, but didn’t get around to it.

“Fanks,” I murmur through a mouthful of cookie.

Marina shakes her head. “You looked like you needed them,” she replies. And I probably did.

I’m trying not to smile, but it’s hard. It’s really hard not to be happy when you’ve got something tasty like this and not everything is terrible. I swallow, and stifle the urge to immediately grab another, so I can ask an important question. “But why’d you do all the scary, painful stuff, Marina? Those hooks hurt.”

Marina’s smile turns mischievous when she admits, “I like to play around with the new blood.”

“O-oh. I see.” I want to ask about the fishbowl, but I’m more frightened than curious about that. Maybe another time.

“It’s just for fun. Nothing personal,” she assures me, patting me on the head like a kid. “We all went through it.”

I kind of nod along in understanding. It’s one of those ‘tradition’ things that some places have. Like saying all second-graders need to lick the flagpole in winter or something like that, right?

“Alright, ya guys wanna go now?” Suzi asks. The doors are freed up again, so we can leave at any time. I should probably go somewhere quiet to patch myself up like they showed me before.

I nod, and make to leave, but Marina grabs my arm, blood soaking into her white sleeve. I look back at her curiously, and she’s rattling her necklace again. Her expression is stern, though. Disappointed, even.

“You didn’t try to get close at all,” Marina scolds me. “I expected better.”

“…I was scared,” I admit, feeling too ashamed to look her in the eyes. “It’s… You were really scary.”

Marina tugs on my arm, forcing me to turn to look at her. “Things out there,” she says, making a sweeping gesture with her other arm, “they’re a lot scarier than me.” Her face softens into a pout of concern. “You can’t always run away from them.”

I understand that. I get that. But that doesn’t make it any easier to cope. “How do you deal with it?” I ask her.

Marina shrugs, telling me plainly, “they’re just prey.”

That’s not the kind of answer I was hoping for. My shoulders sag while I murmur, “I’m not really much of a ‘predator’, though.” I can scarcely picture myself fighting things without feeling a bit… Uncomfortable about it.

Marina lets go of my arm, then places her hand on my shoulder, “It’s okay,” she reassures me. “Sometimes, when you smell blood in the water,” she says in a far off voice, rattling her necklace again, “you just go for it.”

I stare at her, turning the phrase over and over in my head. ‘When you smell blood in the water, just go for it’? “You mean… Sometimes you have to go crazy?” I venture.

Nod. Well, this confirms my fear that Eversors are all a little mad. Might have to ask Fuckface for insanity lessons or something.

“Even so… I’m not very good at melee,” I admit. My last opponent lost by a bunch of factors acting in my favor. I don’t want to have to rely on dumb luck.

Marina smiles again, quietly asking, “Do you want… help?”

I’m kind of struck dumb. I wasn’t really expecting her to volunteer help. It’s not like we’re the best of friends or anything. “I… I don’t know,” I stammer, “I don’t want to be a bother…”

Marina has both hands on my shoulders now, and stares at me intently. “Then…” she starts, lips curling into a playful grin, “bring snacks.”

…Hee. I nod back.

Somebody grabs me by the scruff of the collar and hauls me away. “Alright, alright, time’s a-wastin’,” Suzi grumbles, handing back my soul gem. Not sure what’s eating her, though I guess I do have to get ready for whatever else Kai has lined up for today. I wave goodbye to Marina, and she waves back, springing back into the fishbowl with a splash. It was kind of cool.

After we’re out of the look at the box of snacks - don’t look at the letters – and then remember something important. “Miss Suzi?” I call to the person dragging me around.

Suzi lets me go and moves back into my field of vision. “Just call me Suzi~,” she says with a giggle, “or big sis~.” And then winks at me.

“Miss Suzi.” I repeat sternly. “Could you pass along a message to… whoever’s supposed to get it?”

Wringing her hands again, Suzi explains, “Wellllll, I can sure try.” Leaning in uncomfortably close, she asks me, “what’s the message?” I want to back away to a more comfortable distance, but I really need to get this out of the way.

Taking a deep breath, I tell Suzi, “I’d like to get… help.” I gesture toward the box and the words on it, saying “I need some kind of help controlling the Vanus trance.”

Suzi’s frowning at me in confusion. “But you’re an Eversor now, hun,” she reminds me. “Why’s this so important all of a sudden?”

I hang my head a bit in shame. “If I don’t... Jael says I’m fired.”

“I’ll pass that along to the Warmaster,” Suzi promises, putting her hands on my shoulders and squeezing a little. “I think she’s been plannin’ for this sorta thing. Just sit tight.”

“Thanks,” I reply with a slight smile.

Letting go – wait, I just let her touch me – Suzi giggles, “ihihihi, no problem. Ya ever need anythin’, remember that I’m alwaaaays watchin’~.”

…Goddammit, Suzi.

Omake : Distracted

"The Seeker of Wisdom returns from her trials at last! And while you are the same person as when we last met, you are clearly so very different."

"...Mm?"

"Why have you cut down the most bountiful trees in your garden?"

"...The haircut?"

"That is what I said, yes."

"Er... That's beeeecaaaaaaausssse... I wanted to show how... Show how SERIOUS I am about... You know, shedding this... Uh, SNAKE SKIN! Yeah! The SNAKE SKIN of my past mistakes! So, ah, I MOLTED!"

"Very good, Truth-Seeker! That is exactly what I would have done, were I you and you me."

"Y-yeah... CHANGING things. Different things... Soft, gentle things..."

"And yet your emotions are stormy and turbulent. Did I not tell you to calm your mind?"

"I... I got distracted."

"Distracted."

"VERY distracted."

"I see that. I see it as clear as I see why insects like sugar water."

"Yes, for VERY distracting things happened. They were exCITING distractions at first, but then just... They led to things that I can't get out of my mind."

"I see. How terribly disappointing, Truth-Seeker."

"Oh, I'm, uh... I, uh..."

"I am disappointed in myself. After all, it is not the fault of the rain that the lake is dry if the storm itself is weak."

"Right. The rain's not my fault. Or the storm. I knew that."

"We shall have to take a different approach tomorrow, o Seeker of Enlightenment. For me, this day shall be marked as a failure."

"That's... Ah... That's too bad?"

"Quite. For now you may spread your wings and fly back to the nest, baby bird. You may have a new coat of feathers to keep you warm, but you still haven't learned to hunt."

"...Warm, huh?"

"That means return to your cave and await the embrace of your mother bear, cub."

"Sure, embracing..."

"I said make like a tree and leave, Seeker of Truth!"

"Leave? Oh. Oh! OH! Right! Leave! I'll... Do that! Yes! See you next time, then! I won't let you go- I MEAN DOWN! I WON'T LET YOU DOWN!"

MAGICAL GIRL NOIR QUEST
THE FALL OF CHIAKI MATSUDA

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 11/14/14(Fri)08:52:53 No.36157492 Archived

You growl something particularly unpleasant underneath your breath, before grabbing the showerhead and rinsing yourself off of the lather that Midori had spent quite a good while working up. It's just...it's just TYPICAL of Kharn to call right when things are going good. Sure, your memory isn't very good when it concerns the months you've spent being in the Betrayer's retinue, but somehow you know that this is something she just DOES, deliberately or otherwise.

And you know that she gets a fucking huge kick out of it.

Wrapping a towel around your own still-wet, still-naked form, you stagger out of your bathroom, push past an apologetic Midori, and then plant your bare ass down on the chair behind your desk in a wet squelch. The monitor of your laptop comes alive with a tap of its keys, and the grinning face of your predecessor fills the screen. Sunless eyes and razor-toothed grin and everything.

"Ah, Murderface!" She crows at the sight of you, with all the motherly warmth of a thrown knife. "Dearest of all my frie--"

"Kharn," You cut her off with another growl, one that wouldn't have shamed a Sixth Officio berserker. "I swear I will find and SHAVE the heads of all the blondes in Siberia if this isn't worth my fucking time."

>>36157492

The Betrayer blinks her scarlet-pinned black eyes for a moment, seemingly genuinely taken aback by your greeting - before breaking out into chuckling, and then flashing you another wide and cheerful grin. "Murderface, Murderface! That is no way to be talking to your your former Warmaster and best friend!" She fans her long, cruel claws over her expansive, blouse-clad chest.

"And more than that, an expectant mother! The little ones inside, they may hear such foul language and come out with skewed personalities, you know! In these times, a mother must take care of what she sees and hears, not just what she consumes!" She shakes her head, clicking her tongue in mock annoyance.

You snort here. As if you can say anything to twist Kharn's future kids any more than their own mother. In fact, you're a bit terrified of what the buggers will be like after they're born. Would they be just as bad as your predecessor, as hungry and ravenous for both blood and flesh when she was still at her prime, or - God forbid - be even worse?

You blink away the vision of a horde of black-eyed, black-clawed preschool children swarming over Mami, cackling as they tear her clothes off, and ask your former boss just what she's calling you for again.

"Ah, this is how it is, is it? No time to chat! No time to catch up and even, ah, shoot the shit?" Kharn shakes her head mournfully, before cackling again as she sees you glaring at her. "Fine, fine. I will cut right to the quick, yes?"

She nods, and it's here that all humor and warmth in her face vanishes underneath a mask of...disquieting focus. No one can call it professionalism, not by a long shot, but the way Kharn is staring at you right now, from the screen, it's...you're being reminded just why she's known the way she is, even without the Betrayer epithet.

A killing intent. That was it. A killing intent, palpable even over the hundreds of miles between you and her, even over the Internet connection that made your conversation possible. A stare filled with so much raw, predatory force that you could feel the pricking of her claws against the back of your neck right before she rips your spine out. Or the hot bite of her chainsword's teeth as it chews into your side, right before it tears you in half.

Even if you still feel warm from your bath - and Midori's special, intimate way of scrubbing your back - you still felt the chill knifing through your spine from that stare.

...Well, what about Ahriman, then? You ask Kharn as you force yourself to remain focused, here - as focused as you can be with only a towel around you for modesty, and your Callidus watching on beside you pretty much in the same kind of state.

"I know how you think, Murderface, I have not been blind to your...more admirable ways, even if it seems like I cared nothing more than my conquest." Kharn grins, and it's a sly, knowing thing of curled lips and barely-concealed teeth. "You will want to save this Prophet, and that in itself is worth all the medals that Kyuubey will never give you. But I am here to tell you that it is better for you, for this Prophet, and everyone else involved - that you kill her. Go directly for her throat and end this nasty business."

...Well. Can't say you didn't expect that.

There's something strange about her tone, though. ...It seems like she's hiding something from you, or something she wants to say but doesn't quite know how to say it.

How do you react?

[]I can't, Kharn. I made a promise. Tell me how I can save her instead.
[]I was thinking about that myself. It seems like a neater way to finish things. Have any idea how tough it's going to be?
[]Other.

Ask if she's hiding something. You want to try to save Oriko, but if Kharn has anything that can give you an edge, you'll take it.

You'll decide if you can save her when that time comes.

You frown at Kharn, and her carefully-concealed unease that you would easily have missed if you didn't know her at all. It's not like your predecessor to mince words like this - sure, she wasn't at all that forthcoming back when you asked her about the procedure you underwent, but for everything else, she shared what she knew willingly. ...Well, besides some other things you had to find out for yourself, anyway.

You shake your head and tell Kharn no. No, you're not going into this with the aim of killing Oriko. Not after you made a promise to try everything in your power to save her first. If she called you up simply to try and make you take the easiest, cleanest way out of this mess, then she's wasting her time - and yours, too.

If not, then she should at least tell you how to save Oriko.

For a wonder, the Betrayer is silent throughout your half-irritated, half-annoyed response - and she only speaks after you start drumming your fingers impatiently on the keyboard.

"Ah...so I see. You made a promise, eh?" Kharn chuckles again, the sound made almost seductive with her smooth, gun oil-slick voice, even with her harsh accent. "Well, that explains it." She lets out a sigh, before looking back up at you, a wistful smile on her lips.

"You should be a bit more careful with the promises you makes, Murderface, yes? Unsavory and uncouth individuals like me, well, we can ignore and betray our oaths without care, for we only value the ones we make for our own benefit, and cast them aside easily when they have outlived their usefulness."

Another chuckle, and it's here that you see her look down at her stomach, one brutally-clawed hand resting gently on the visible bump there. "

"While the shining ideals of humanity like you and Tomoe Mami, well, your promises mean everything. They mean the world, a sacred trust, both to you and the one you made the promise to. Breaking your promise to them is to rape everything they love in front of them, and tear them apart in the afterglow."

You narrow your eyes at Kharn. You, a shining ideal of humanity? For fuck's sake, it's been barely a month ago that you were throwing up all over yourself from a failed attempt at murdering your liver with Kong. How the fuck did you suddenly get to be uttered in the same breath as Mami?

Christ, is this what pregnancy does to Magical Girls? Turns them fucking insane?

"Motherhood is a beautiful thing, Murderface, do not say otherwise!" Kharn snaps at you, suddenly irate. "It fills you with a youthful bloom of health and vigor, as it prepares you to bring forth the crystallization of love into the world!" She sighs happily, contentedly, making you blink again. "Ah, if only you could be here to see me, Murderface. Souji says that I am the most beautiful mother-to-be that he has ever seen. More beautiful than the ones he sees on the internet."

...What?

"Oh, do not worry, I hit him hard enough for him to learn not to make another comment like that." Kharn laughs. "But, ah, anyway. I say that you are like Mami, because you are Warmaster now."

She grins at you. "But not like how I was Warmaster. I made my throne with skulls, Murderface - you are building your own with the trust of your colleagues and your subordinates as a foundation. Already I am hearing that many are impressed by the way you are conducting yourself, including those contracted by other Incubators."

Kharn grins wider at your shocked expression. "Oh, do not look so surprised, Murderface. Even in disgraced exile, Valnikov Kharn has her own contacts, limited as they are. I am told enough, and the rest I can infer easily enough. For everything else, there is always the Internet, and a thieving little cat I can rely on for information."

Hah. Well, that you didn't expect. But she was saying something about you and being a fucking paragon of humanity...?

"Oh, yes, that." The raven-haired Betrayer chuckles. "Yes, well. You are part of that elite echelon because people trust you and respect you in equal measure. Your promises are ironclad, worth their weight in gold, because of your reputation, your rank, and your...stubbornness in upholding them." The pause in her words is filled with a meaningful silence, one that she spent staring pointedly in your eyes. "But promises are sometimes broken, Murderface, and--"

You shake your head. No. You're not going to break your promise. Not unless there's nothing else that can be done to save Oriko. Then, maybe, you'll consider it.

"But--"

You slam your hand, open-palmed, down on your table. The resultant noise loud enough and sudden enough that it makes the green-haired Callidus beside you flinch in surprise, and the former Warmaster in your screen blink in startled amazement.

"I said no, Kharn." You growl at her this time. "Now just tell me what you're hiding and stop stalling."

Silence. Stunned, shocked silence from your former Warmaster and friend.

Another moment later, and she lets out a bark of a laugh, harsh and sinister. Wagging a black fleshmetal claw at you, cackling all the while.

"This is why! This is why I chose you for my retinue, Murderface! This is why I saved you from execution, way back then!" Kharn chuckles. "You do not miss anything, do you? Nothing at all! Ah, how I wish I could be there, to see you blossoming into the role you were born for!"

You growl her name again, trying to get her back on track, but you can't help but feel just a bit embarrassed at her words all of a sudden. Kharn was a soul who handed out compliments sparingly, and despite your current ire at her, to get her actual feedback on how you've been doing is...well, galvanizing, at least. That you're not doing anything wrong.

"Alright, alright. I suppose I should make the most out of this call, and tell you just what I've been told." Kharn nods slowly, one clawed hand going back to her belly again. "There...is a way to save this Oriko, Murderface. One that you will be able to do yourself. But..." Her black, iris-less eyes - save for the small dots of crimson at the very centers - flicker with clear uncertainty. "...It requires a sacrifice that you yourself will have to make."

How do you react?

Because I sort of remember telling Kirika we'll try but we can't make guarantees if Oriko's not willing to let herself be saved.

Mostly, I'm curious if it works as a switch or if Midori is pushed to the passenger's seat so to speak and Chiaki is left without a driver since the wording way back when was kinda vague.

Also, it would be funny to see "Midori" stumbling about, unused to her center of gravity.

I'm kinda tempted to draw "Midori" stumbling about, but, eh, context. At any rate, it's a cute and funny mental image but I'm not certain if a switch is funnier or not. I think it would be adorable for Midori to finally have the smaller and shorter body she idealizes in a rather roundabout way.

A sacrifice? You narrow your eyes here. What kind of sacrifice? And is this the kind of sacrifice that you'll regret making, or what?

Kharn spreads her brutally-clawed hands wide in front of her, the gesture bringing to mind an unwelcome vision of black blades being drawn in the dark to commit murder. When she speaks, it's with with the same shameful helplessness tainting her gaze and curdling her smile.

"I...I cannot say for certain, Murderface, I apologize. I do not know what you will need to sacrifice in order to save the Prophet." Kharn shakes her head at your frown of obvious disappointment, but presses on.

"Please, Murderface...Chiaki, listen." Her voice catches as she calls you by your real name. "I have only been told that you will know what you need to sacrifice when you are there, in the place where gods and mortals meet, where angels die at the whims of daemons. And while you will regret the sacrifice itself - to your very core - you will make it anyway, because that is what she sees you will do if you keep to this path."

...She? Who told her? Who's this 'she'?

"I made a promise," Kharn whispers now, looking back down at her belly once more. "One I do not wish to break, for the consequences....may not be something I can live with."

You blink at her, unbelievingly, before reaching up with one hand to pinch the bridge of your nose. Is...is everyone in on this entire thing? Is this one whole big joke, to keep you in the dark about IMPORTANT SHIT LIKE THIS, so that everyone can laugh when you inevitably fuck up afterward?

How do you react?

[]...Who told you, Kharn? Who made you promise? It's Malal, isn't it? Malal put you up to this?
[]Well, if you don't know, you can guess, right? Come on, Kharn, work with me here. What will I regret giving up? ...Is it pancakes?

Also we should make sure to confer with everybody and inform them that our highest priority will be getting all of us out alive. We'll try to save Oriko, yes. We promised that. But we have also promised to protect the girls in our Officio, and if it comes down to a choice between Oriko and one of them, we can't choose the one who's been murdering our people.

Pancakes, however, dear, are a sacrifice we may have to make for the greater good. Here's hoping we don't contract a wheat allergy while we're there.

It's Malal, isn't it? You snarl the accusation at Kharn, making Midori flinch at your side - and you feel her soft, warm hand rest on your bare shoulder.

"Chiaki, I--" Kharn starts, looking absolutely wretched - but you cut her off with another growl.

Malal told Kharn. You know it's her. The Culexus put her up to this - making your former Warmaster as just another part of her convoluted, all-encompassing plan that you can't make heads or tails out of, and frankly it's getting on your fucking nerves.

What kind of plan involves jerking someone with amnesia around with cryptic, half-complete information, supplied piecemeal at every fucking turn? Information that not only involves the aforementioned amnesia-afflicted dildo, but the safety of the people she cares about?

Why can't you just get a fucking straight answer just FOR FUCKING ONCE?

"Sempai..." Midori murmurs, giving your shoulder a gentle squeeze. For a moment, a hot flush of anger tempts you to brush her hand off - but you resist against it, instead nodding and taking a deep breath. Taking your time to exhale, forcing yourself to calm down.

Kharn, to her credit, waits for you to speak again, the shark-eyed former Warmaster seemingly cowed into silence just like any rattled novice in front of an irate superior officer. You'd have enjoyed the moment, if it weren't for the fact that what you're about to consider next is something that tears at your very core.

"It's Kyoko, isn't it?" You finally manage to say, the words sounding and tasting like the most disgusting, most putrid poison. "You're saying I have to kill my best friend to save someone who doesn't deserve it."

Silence. One long enough, and strained enough, that it's an answer all in itself.

You close your eyes as you suddenly feel angry enough to kill someone. The hot rush of it riding in your blood, coursing through your veins, filling your heart and mind with the lava-heat of absolute killing fury. Briefly tainting your vision a bloody red.
How do you respond?

[]Wrong answer, Kharn. Try again. While I'm still in this fucking chair and not teleporting over to strangle you for suggesting I kill my best friend.

The conversation had been kind of unnecessarily convoluted and I'm only half paying attention because of work but: Kharn calls saying it's something important, Chiaki asks what is it, Kharn starts talking about Oriko and praises Chiaki keeping her promises, Chiaki replies that she'll try and to get to the chase, Kharn implies that Chiaki will have to sacrifice something to keep that promise, Chiaki surmises that she's talking about Kyouko, Kharn shuts the fuck up and now we're here.

Given the flow of the conversation, I think we should keep the pressure up and call out Kharn on her silence rather than letting up at this point. There's more that she isn't telling.

I don't remember the exact wording, maybe someone else could look it up, but I'm fairly certain we were more careful with that promise telling Kirika that we would "try" and, to be fair, we're trying. She went be pleased by us picking Kyouko, who she dislikes, over Oriko, but we'll try.

And, more to the point, from a completely functional and cynical point of view, we already know that Kirika is quickly losing her memories since she started inhabiting the katana.

Realistically, we don't even have to try. We can just wait for her to wait for Oriko.

I'd pick Kyouko. The only one who even knows about the promise is Kirika. Everyone else only knows that were going out of out way to try and save Oriko, nothing else. If we hold up our end of the bargain by trying then it's all good, but if we fail and she Kyouko only then the only one burned is Kirika... Who's rapidly losing her memory.

It's a bit mercenary, but weighing both options, Kyouko's life a d Sayaka's sanity trumps Kirika Checked back in Thread 189.

Kirika nods at this. "What about Oriko, then?"

Standard hostage recovery pattern, you reply just as quickly. Because that's what she is, isn't she? A hostage. Whether on her own doing or by Ahriman controlling her, it doesn't matter. You'll do your best to rescue her from the shit she'd dived headfirst into, and let the cards fall where they may after that.

"..." The former Eversor Rank Leader falls silent again, before speaking up. "Bring me with you, when you go to purge those under her command. Let me assume control when you face her, Murderface." She swallows here, hard, audibly, as if each word is scorching her throat, as if it's that painful to say. "I'll do my best to get through to her at that moment. If there's nothing that can be done, then I'll kill her myself."

...Can she do something like that?

"No, I can't." Kirika shakes her head, and it's here that you see that her hands are trembling. Dislodging a few paper cranes from her lap. "But someone else may get it wrong. That's why I have to do it."

"The chances of Oriko being saved are laughably slim. I know what a Golden Weapon can do to someone with an established contract." She nods at you. "And you know what they can do to a civilian."

"Slim as they are, the fact that there's still a chance warrants an attempt. As many attempts as it takes." Kirika offers you a hand - and you blink once at it, before taking it and allowing her to pull you up back to your feet. "Even if I will forget her eventually - even if I do turn into a stark-raving bitch ghost inside a pretty knife - I can go to that hell without the regret of not doing everything I can for her." She shrugs again. "Hopefully, she will forgive me in the afterlife."

...Well, she doesn't have to worry about that.

You shake your head. You won't give her all the control. You'll be facing Oriko together. If it comes to that - if she really can't be saved - then you'll be the one to kill Oriko.

An implication isn't assent either. I'm just saying it's foolish to work under an assumption that specific when it will hamper us in the middle of an op.

Part of predestination and precognition is pushing things the way you want them to go, and while Kharn might not be hedging....that doesn't mean Malal wasn't making Kharn her patsy bu hinting without telling.

Fair point, but if we tried to second guess every plot hook we'd be here all day. Some things you just need to take at face value and let the narrative play out. If no hints are given to the contrary, I'd be inclined to go with it and work with what we're given instead of dragging g out the pre-mission prep any longer

No. No, you can't lose control now. Yes, you're pissed off. Yes, you're angry. But this is no time to let your emotions get the better of you. Kharn's made some stupid decisions, sure, but she's suffered for them - and she's trying to help you now, even in this stunted, stilted way. Even if she's clearly muzzled from telling you everything, somehow.

You close your eyes, take another deep breath, and then open your eyes again at your slow exhalation. Willing your entire body to remain still, to drive away the temptation of succumbing to the cathartic release of anger.

And when you speak, it's with a tightly-controlled voice, one with calm forced into it.

"Kharn?" You call your former Warmaster, and she looks up at you with tears welling up around her sharklike orbs, looking dangerously close to breaking down. "There's another way, right? I don't care who told you. That doesn't matter. Just...tell me if there's something else I can do." You pause here, swallowing hard. "Please."

For a long moment of silence, Kharn looks down at her belly, again, at that small but obvious bump bulging from her blouse - her two brutally-clawed hands curled over it in unconscious protectiveness - before she looks up again. A tearful smile now curling her lips.

"You have always been eager to kill, Murderface," She says, her tone wistful, distant. "I am not lying when I say this. Sure, you loved to drown yourself in the bottle too much, and you are incorrigible when you are assigned to a squad leader who is not Mami, which is often, but..." Kharn turns to the side for a moment, her gaze locking onto something offscreen - and you see her nod, slowly, before turning back to you. "...you have always been the first to arrive in any combat zone, and always the last to leave. First in, last out. Always, whenever there is killing to be made."

...First in, last out? What does have to do with--

"First in, last out." Kharn repeats, as if in a trance. Her eyes locked at yours but looking at something else. Something beyond you.

+ It's a clue, Nameless One. + Dildoes' voice is a silken hiss in your mind. + The Betrayer is saying that to save Oriko, you have to do it on your own. With the rest of your party - Kyoko especially - out of the Akashic Realm. +

That's...that's it?

That's all you have to do? To make sure Kyoko and the others are out of there before you attempt it?

+ It's the likeliest explanation. I'd stake my reputation upon it. + Dildoes replies firmly. + And probably all we're going to get out of her. Whoever swore her into silence doesn't seem to be playing around.+

How do you react?

To be fair, Girl A's modus operandi was to kill/incapacitate the body and then go after the Soul Gem. While we didn't get the details of her encounter with Ahriman, the narration said there were gunshots followed by Ahriman's scream. Shooting the Soul Gem doesn't give anyone a chance to scream so it's safe to assume that Girl A underestimated Ahriman because of perfect time stop; incapacitating the body first and then getting fried by magic when she went after the Soul Gem.

We should endeavor not to repeat that mistake

Kharn was narrating that flashback to Chiaki so we do know this in character. Mind you, that particular scene was vague, there are some assumptions there, but it fits the pattern of Girl A's behaviour during the incident that started the entire fiasco and during the fight that broke out at the Third.

You thank Kharn after a long moment of silence. She's...it's only now that you realize just how much she wanted to tell you something, but had somehow been rendered unable to do so. You're not sure just how, but you have your own suspicions. Fear is one but....you don't see Kharn as someone who actually feared anything OR anyone. That, then, leaves the fear that would reduce someone like the Betrayer to tears, a familiar fear that you'd been wrestling with ever since you started on this path to dildodom: the fear of something horrific happening to people you care about. The fear of something happening to them that you will be hopeless to prevent or mitigate.

In response, Kharn giggles - no longer her predatory chuckle, but an actual breathless giggle, one seemingly born of fatigued gratitude and relief. Gratitude that you didn't push the matter, and relief that she can now speak of other, lighter matters. "It...it is okay, Murderface. Do not mention it. I know that I have much to atone for, and I am trying. Truth to be told, Souji did not wish for me to make this call, but...I wanted to. And so we are here."

She holds up a clawed hand as you frown. "He does not know all the details. I have spared him from the more important details that concern you and me and our...condition. His desire was a result of lamentable ignorance, but one I have inflicted upon him, and so it is forgivable." Another giggle. "But yes, I could not let you go there without telling you. As...much as I am able to."

You nod. That's all you needed, anyway. Well, besides anything she can tell you about how Ahriman usually fights.

[1/2]

>> ☐ Deculture 11/14/14(Fri)14:19:33 No.36161148

>>36161126

Kharn waves a clawed hand. "Ahriman is a sorcerer. Magic spells are her forte. Granted, I do not know how she will make her will manifest in the Akashic Realm, and through this Prophet - but it is a safe bet, I think, to expect all manner of trickery from her. Unfair tricks, like summoned monsters and daemons. Fire and brimstone launched at you from afar. Nothing like how we fight." Her old grin comes to the surface, just as she delicately takes a handkerchief from her blouse pocket and dabs at her eyes with it.

...Right. Well. How are the babies, then...?

At this particular question, Kharn brightens up, her black sharklike eyes glittering. "Ahaha! Well, I, ah, they are doing very well, Murderface! Kyuubey, he flies over a Venenum every week or so to check and conduct ultrasounds, and they are healthy from what I am understanding! Ten fingers, ten toes, perfect brain and organ formation!" Her bosom swells with pride as she pats her swollen stomach.

"Strong children, Murderface, born to continue the Valnikov bloodline! Fraternal twins, a boy and a girl!" She grins at you, the oppressive black mood from earlier gone and clearly forgetten now. "Souji is being a dildo about it as usual, but I am decided to make you godmother once they are born!"

God...godmother? You blink, here, feeling your cheeks burn at the unexpected surprise. But...isn't that for relatives, or something? Surely there's someone who should be better qualified--

"All dead!" Kharn shakes her head happily. "But, ah, I am picking you, there is no argument!"

Your cheeks burn hotter at this, before you nod. Well, if she's sure, then...yeah, why not. You've always wanted to find out what it's like to be one.

"I'll have the paperwork sent over once they are born, then!" Kharn claps both clawed hands in approval, clearly pleased at this turn of events. "If Souji calls you and tries to offer you money to turn it down, just say no!"

Hah. Alright. ...Oh, yeah. Did she get the package you sent her?

"Oh, yes, it did arrive, very quickly in fact!" Kharn nods. "Sent here on Warmaster Priority, along with my old skull throne! They will come in handy when we are to make the childrens' quarters, the throne especially."

W-what? How? You blink here. The...skull throne, maybe, but the panties--

"Wallpaper, Murderface!" The Betrayer giggles. "It will make their room's walls colorful and exciting to look at! Ah, and the skull throne, I've already taken apart to make into their crib! It is very fetching, and very comfortable, too!"

...A baby crib made out of skulls?

Metal, you decide inwardly. That's very metal.

"I am sure you are jealous, now, huh?" Kharn is smiling again, this time a sly smile. "Well? When are you getting your own, Murderface? Or is Hanegawa the one to be the mother?"

It's here that you feel the hand on your shoulder suddenly clamp down hard, almost to the point of pain - and you look up to see Midori, shaking, her face completely red.

"If...s-sempai, if you want, I--" Is all you can get from her, before her words quickly turn into unintelligible murmurings.

How do you respond?

Magical Juggernaut Heather Crunch versus Magical Ascetic Valentina Tenko II: The Shoutening

For the first time since I've arrived here, the rays of the sun wake me. A light STRICTLY INFERIOR to the INFERNO that BURNS within me, however! For now that Heather Crunch has opened her eyes, the RADIANCE of my SOUL ITSELF shall OUTSHINE said sun's light!

I stretch a few times before LEAPING out of bed. And then… I POSE against the backdrop of the rising sun!

Hold it…

Hold iiiiiit…

YES! I AM GREAT! I AM READY! I AM...

I am just not feeling it this morning. Ugh, it's too damn quiet! I'm actually starting to -miss- those noisy maids.

NO! NO I'M NOT, DAMMIT! BANISH SUCH THOUGHTS FROM YOUR MIND!

Were it only so simple to do so, and yet I am POISONED with thoughts about HER. The faint, fruity fragrance of her shampoo; the gentle sounds of her breathing; the curve of her back as I held her… How could such a slight, slender body feel so warm and soft? Was it her? Was it the silky fabrics she wore? Or was it how her arms draped around me, before slowly caressing my back and wrapping me in a tight embrace?

…Dammit, it's worse than I'd thought. I hope that some breakfast will give my thoughts focus towards IMPORTANT matters.

I move along to the kitchen and seat myself. And then unseat myself when I realize I have to make my own breakfast once again. Which is ABSOLUTELY fine, since they didn't do it right anyway.

That means the usual spread: meat, pancakes, meat, hash browns, meat, orange slices, meat, baked beans, meat, eggs, meat, milk, meat, sausage, and meat! A feast that is ALMOST WORTHY of me! If I could just get the hash browns and pancakes to stop tasting so floury, then TRULY it would be the Heather Crunch of breakfasts! As it stands, however, it is SORELY LACKING in that regard!

Nakajima did good hash browns and pancakes. I should ask- No, no, NO! I am NOT thinking about this again!

[1/8]

As it turns out, breakfast is NOT enough to alleviate oneself of unwanted thoughts. Nor is a comprehensive workout. Or a shower – the latter actually WORSENED things because of the lingering smell of Nakajima's shampoo.

But I will NOT allow myself to fail the Soul Temperer's trials again! Once is one time too many as it is! And to PROVE to her that I am taking her lessons to heart, I shall undergo her tutelage WITHOUT invoking my transformation! I may have failed the meditation, but I shall still… Whatever it is she said!

Even though it means wearing the only outfit the Nakajimas prepared. And now, standing in front of the bathroom's full-length mirror, I can see the costume in its entirety.

There are the polished black leather dress shoes, with a little black bow done up near the tongue. The inside of them was actually quilted; I'm amazed they were able to make shoes like this in the time allotted. The pure white socks are NOT as glamorous as my favorite stockings, but they fit like a glove.

The black dress itself is… black. Except for the collar, which is white. Its sleeves are short and puffy, only reaching up to the elbows, and the skirt is knee-length. The apron frills at the shoulder belts and at the bottom. It was somewhat of a challenge to tie the waist belts, but the perfect ribbon they form resting on my hips is testament to my skill! I didn't even –need- your help with THAT, NAKAJIMA!

Speaking of bows, the blue ribbon over my chest looks like it's missing something. On a whim, I brush my fingers across my soul gem, causing it to jump in a spark of light onto the ribbon, and reform as a gilded brooch. HA! I HAVE IMPROVED UPON YOUR ORIGINAL ENSEMBLE, NAKAJIMA!

And of course, the little frilled hair band to complete the look.

I twirl, do a curtsey, and pose for the mirror, concluding that I ROCK the maid outfit. WEEP AT YOUR FORSAKEN OPPORTUNITY TO GAZE UPON MY SPLENDOR, NAKAJIMA!

NOT THAT I CARE!

Kicking down the sliding door, I announce to the room at large, "SOUL TEMPERER! I HAVE ARRIVED!" For NOW Heather Crunch graces this humblest of halls with her MAJESTIC MAGNIFICENCE!

Standing with her back to me, Soul Temperer Valentina Tenko muses aloud, "the Seeker of Wisdom returns to pursue atonement." She glances over her shoulder to address me directly, inquiring, "and yet, are you really here at-" The Soul Temperer trails off, facing me directly with her eyes wide and her jaw dropped.

I stare at her with bemusement."What?" I KNOW I'm a sight to behold, but your reaction is SEVERELY delayed, Soul Temperer. You should have shown such reverence LAST TIME!

Tenko brings her hand up to her cheek, her face flush and a trail of drool leaking from her mouth. That's... Not the reaction I was hoping for. I wanted AWE, not this. "I see the leopard has changed its shorts!" she exclaims, lips twitching into a smile that make me feel VERY, VERY UNCOMFORTABLE! AND I REALLY DON'T THINK THAT'S HOW THE EXPRESSION GOES!

"Yyyyes," I cautiously reply, though I remain UNDAUNTED! "I TOLD you I was serious about... you know..." I push up my sleeves, then shout, "CLEANING UP MY ACT!" while wearing the cheekiest grin I can manage.

This brings the Soul Temperer to her senses, and she is INCREDULOUS. "Perhaps you are, perhaps you are not," she muses, arms behind her back as she walks towards me. "It remains to be seen, and talk itself is cheap." Her eerie leering returns when she gets close enough. "Also the clothes are displeasingly conservative," she observes, causing me to pull the skirt down lower. "The neckline and hem are too high. Could you-"

"NO!" I adamantly refuse! "FOCUS!" Admiration is fine, but your slimy stare is sending sickening shivers down my spine and making my skin crawl! SO STOP IT!

FINALLY the Soul Temperer seems to be taking things SERIOUSLY again. "Very well, then," she announces with a brief cough. "On to the task at hand."

Now that the Soul Temperer has focused on her duties once more, there will be NO FURTHER DISTRACTIONS from my goal! THAT'S RIGHT, NAKAJIMA! YOUR STRANGLEHOLD ON MY THOUGHTS ENDS HERE! WAIL AND GNASH YOUR TEETH ALL YOU LIKE, IT WILL DO YOU –NO GOOD WHATSOEVER-! YOU CAN LOOK AS PITIFUL AND HELPLESS AS YOU LIKE… AS, AS FRAIL AND DEFENSELESS AS A PUPPY SOMEBODY JUST KICKED… SHE'S the one who told me to keep holding her, dammit, it wasn't –my- fault things were so awkward!

"Are you clear on your objective for today?" The Soul Temperer abruptly asks of me. Was… Was she talking to me just now? I didn't hear a thing she said.

"It was something about peaches, wasn't it?" I hazard. The Soul Temperer frowns and shakes her head.

"That was merely one strand of the caterpillar's cocoon," she... explains? Does that mean that I was partially right? "Were you not listening?"

"I was in contemplation of things!" I tell her - it's not exactly a lie - then hastily shout, "VERY IMPORTANT THINGS!"

"And still you seem unsatisfied," she observes, her stare stern and concerned.

"I, uh, haven't reached an answer yet," I say, but then BOLDLY PROCLAIM, "But I will! I SWEAR it!" I EMPHASIZE THIS by POUNDING my chest with my arm - which unfortunately draws her lurid gaze again.

"-Now- you're showing the fire I knew you had inside you!" she says to my bosom, and then gives me the eye contact she should have made from the beginning, her eyes burning with zeal. "Come, Seeker of Truth, shed your cocoon and emerge as the radiant butterfly once more!"

"I SAID I'M NOT GETTING NAKED FOR YOUR AMUSEMENT!" I SHOUT, STAMPING MY FOOT IN FRUSTRATION AT THE HEDONISTIC COMPANY I'VE ENDURED SINCE MY ARRIVAL!

The Soul Temperer smiles sadly. "That is truly a pity, but not what I asked you to do," she insists. She reaches to her side and unsheathes her blade, a gout of flame erupting from the scabbard. "As before, Seeker of Enlightenment - show me your heart!"

HA! GLADLY!" I bellow with great enthusiasm! A clash again an equal! Like I could turn down such an opportunity!

"While I did specify that you should not engage your powers, it is necessary to do so now," the Soul Temperer explains, looking sadly at me – or my body. I can't tell. "You are wound up too tight and liable to break." Walking away from me and motioning for me to follow, she makes a grandiose gesture towards the sky. "Until we cross this fjord in the river of your life, Truth-Seeker, we shall also cross blades!"

Her metaphor doesn't work, but it doesn't matter! "BRING IT ON, SOUL TEMPERERRRR!" I roar, hand clasped over my shining red soul gem! An EXPLOSION of light engulfs me, as I am clothed in my mighty garments once more! I CHASE after the Soul Temperer, jacket BILLOWING, ribbons TRAILING, mind and body FILLED WITH PURPOSE! Yes, truly THIS is what I am GRATEFUL for, Miss Marigold! THIS is what my roses symbolize! A chance for ATONEMENT and BETTERMENT of myself, and NOT some chance meeting with a red-haired rival with KISSABLE LIPS and GREAT LEGS-

…You know, I don't –need- the ribbon and roses to emphasize my greatness! Thus, I remove the offending object and stick it in my inventory, before catching up with the Soul Temperer. She seems curious about the lack of flowers, but tactfully says nothing for once, leading me outside to a small clearing.

Driving her blade into the ground, the Soul Temperer instructs me to stand close. Immediately, the earth surrounding us breaks away from the ground as it begins to float, carrying us with it. “I need to assess your spirit as we fly, Seeker of Truth,” she says with complete seriousness, her hand suddenly squeezing my ass.

…I’m not convinced, and smack her hand away.

“Please, Truth-Seeker, this is important,” she insists. I GLARE at her in response, and she returns my glare with equal intensity. Then, slowly, she reaches around and squeezes again.

“Welcome, Seeker of Enlightenment, to the Valley of Eight Million Gods!”

The Soul Temperer proclaims this after we set down in a large clearing. I take a few steps away from her, finally afforded the opportunity to do so. ‘Spirit assessment’; what nonsense!

“I see no gods,” I point out to her. Indeed, nothing here resembles any sort of god. There are scars of battle, such as scorch marks, dead clumps of plants, craters, and broken, rusted weapons scattered here and there. I can almost SMELL the blood and sweat shed through countless skirmishes. Nevertheless, there are no gods here.

The Soul Temperer grins at me, blade removed from the ground. Pointing it at me, she inquires, “Have you seen the face that looks back at you from the water’s edge?”

I cannot help but smile at that. “HA! Flattery won’t save you, you know!” I warn her! At LEAST she acknowledges that my GREATNESS is COMPARABLE to divinity!

“I wasn’t counting on it!” she assures me! “Do not fall upon me like a light shower, Seeker of Wisdom, but come at me with the force of a mighty typhoon!” Even I can understand that!

“TO ME, EVERSWORD!” I cry out, my voice ECHOING through this desolate place! WILLING my MIGHTY WEAPON into existence, my Eversword pieces itself together in my hand as I feel its handle in my grip!

NOW POSE!

"Your blade shines a gold more brilliant than the sun, Truth-Seeker!" lauds the Soul Temperer, already poised for battle! Sure enough, the Eversword glows a deep yellow today! Not blue, nor red, but GOLD! Or perhaps more of an amber color-

GODDAMMIT, NAKAJIMA! GET OUT OF MY HEAD!

"IT'S WHATEVER COLOR I WANT IT TO BE!" I assert!

“Then come, Seeker of Truth!” the Soul Temperer reminds me, bringing my focus back to IMPORTANT things! “Prove that the fire inside you is not merely a transient, flickering ember!”

Letting loose a howl WORTHY of the Sixth Officio, I grip my blade and charge her!

The Soul Temperer of the Seventh manages to BLOCK my attack with her own blade, the FORCE of the blow kicking up dust and dirt. I quickly spin about and hit her with ANOTHER slash, but AGAIN she parries the strike. However, I am DRIVING her back with the strength and ferocity of my attacks, and have YET to show any opening for her to use her weapon to attack! She seems to sense this as well, and disengages from me, leaping back a few feet. Before I can make another strike, she mightily stomps the ground, and a pillar of earth ERUPTS beneath my feet, LAUNCHING me further back!

After I come to a stop, a BARRAGE of BOULDERS ASSAILS me from what USED to be that earthen pillar! BUT THIS WILL NOT EVEN SLOW THE CRUNCH TRAIN! I POWER THROUGH AND CHARGE DOWN THE SOUL

TEMPERER, POISED TO STRIKE! She has RAISED a GREAT WALL OF STONE between us, BUT THAT IS NOT ENOUGH! “STONE-CLEAVING STRIKE!” I SHOUT, AND DEMOLISH THE WALL WITH A SLASH FROM MY BLADE! Pressing onward towards my opponent, SPRINTING over the ruined remnants of rock, I fail to find her.

A SPIKE of STONE STABS at me from below, DETACHING from the ground as it HURLS me back! The Soul Temperer now occupies my previous position, and is poised to prepare another powerful assault! I can SEE her sword starting to simmer as FIRES fan forth from it!

I REMAIN UNDAUNTED! I rush in, sword at the ready, as it GROWS BIGGER AND BIGGER! The Soul Temperer sends a TIDAL WAVE of FIRE at me, but NOT EVEN THE FIRES OF THE DEEPEST HELLS BURN HOTTER THAN MY WINNING SPIRT! Compared to that, these blazing flames are LUKEWARM AT BEST! WHIRLING around, I make a GREAT SWEEPING ATTACK with my blade! Through the flames, I see the hazy outline of the Soul Temperer STRUCK by my giant Eversword, UNABLE to erect any defense in time! It sends her TUMBLING over the ground for a CONSIDERABLE distance before braking herself with her blade. Standing up and dusting herself off, she seems mostly unharmed. TRULY A WORTHY OPPONENT!

“Truth-Seeker!” she calls out to me, her voice reverberating across this barren battlefield! “I am certain that I told you to not toy with me! Is that the best you can do?”

“HA!” I proclaim, thumping my chest, “I have not yet BEGUN to fight!” Indeed, THAT was merely a WARM-UP! A PRELUDE to a PROPER CONFRONTATION!

Pointing my blade at her, I exclaim, “Enough with the banter! NOW we clash for REAL!” and rush back into the fray!

THERE WILL BE NO STOPPING THE CRUNCH TRAIN! NOT WHEN IT’S CRUNCH TIME! I CAN EASILY LAST THIS ENTIRE FIGHT! I could go for DAYS! –THAT- IS HOW GREAT MY ZEAL AND DETERMINATION IS!

You’re exaggerating, an annoying voice in the back of my head states. THAT VOICE SHOULD SHUT UP!

Hah! Nakajima is really missing out -- Stop thinking about that!

Trials of the Thrice-Cursed

Chapter 3-1: Cold Homes

I used to work for the Ninth, it was a time of thrills and dangers I'll never forget. I thought it was lost when my world was broken down, but I was able to feel it again. Alongside other things I would have preferred not to remember. Well, that's only half-true.

I would have preferred to forget the time when I was having difficulty controlling my abilities, but it's coming back to me now; as if I needed to prove my worth all over again. On the flip side, there's no way I would ever want to forget those two girls who gave me everything when I had nothing but myself. No, I'm not talking about the duo from the Third, as pleasant company as they may be.

We were just so compatible; they were outcasts like me - in a relative sense - who loved havoc and bloodshed, but they were different. They had something I never did; each others. Oh don't take me wrong, they weren't in love or anything. It was more some sort of... profound kinship, something above just being friends, and yet... I was entranced by one and liked to relax with the other. The three of us together were a force that could take down anything, or so I liked to believe. It wasn't just about raw power no, that can only get you so far... It was about bonds. Bonds forged in fire and war.

Truth be told I've been wanting to look for them since the very first day - and I actually did when I first checked this "version" of the Officio, but I don't have the resources or the contacts right now. It's painful. It already was, but now that I've tasted pleasure again it only makes me bitter that I'm no longer able to share it with them. I'll never give up on them, I just need to get myself set back up... find ways to earn enough money to--

"I'll think about it. You didn't come all this way just to criticize my lunch, right?"

"One other thing... get ready tonight."

"Ready for what?"

"For staying up late, and for live fire training."

"What, like... being set on fire?"

"Shot at. With guns."

"WHAT?"

"Shh."

"I believe we were waiting for the rest." Suzume's voice snapped me back to reality with a demanding sharpness as she tapped her fingertips quietly on the armrest of her chair.

"Y-yeah, sorry." I apologized a bit begrudgingly, having trailed off to the dark corners of my mind in the middle of my explanation-slash-debriefing. "That's about it as far as what we found anyway, I can hand over one of the Grief Seeds for you to study if you want."

The tall Calidus nodded lightly, still sounding uncompromising, but yet not cold. "Yes, I would appreciate that. " A small pause, she shifted her weight ever so slightly. "But let us come back to the most.. delicate part, the one you told Silke you would mention later, which would be now."

I sighed heavily. I was uncomfortable with the topic but had little choice in the matter. "Alright... 8 years ago is when I joined Witch Cults, I was in those for a little less than five years, then I quit. I only contracted a few months after that."

"And why did you quit? Surely one does not simply 'up and leave' from this kind of... 'secret societies'." Suzume observed me with an unnervingly scrutinizing look. I felt like she could see through any lie with that gaze, but that was probably just the shame in me speaking.

"Two reasons." I raised two skeletal fingers in emphasis. "One, I had gotten what I always wanted" I then pointed them towards my tar-like eyes. "I had already became dangerous back then. Nothing like now of course, but enough for normal humans to not want to fuck with me." I paused to take a long gulp of Vodka. "Two, I... met people. People who put me back on the right track. They saved me from my foolishness I guess, though I'm not exactly out for atonement either."

"I see... I'll leave that part alone for now. However, your abilities... would I be wrong to say it sounds like they were... tainted by your time with the Cults?" I couldn't help but wonder if The Calidus' calm was real or just a mask. No matter what I said or did she barely looked affected.

"I'd... actually, yeah, no point in trying to fuck around the bush on that one." I let out a short sigh and leaned back into my seat, trying to relax at least a little. "I don't know if it would have been any different if I had lived differently, but that's how it is now. Every time I use my magic it's not flowers and sunshine it's sulfur and withering."

Suzume nodded lightly, stealing a glance towards Silke; probably to make sure she was still listening and doing fine. "I see, that explains a lot of things. I've never heard of similar cases before, but it would be believable to me that extended contact with Barriers can still affect your soul, whether it has been made physical or not by an Incubator yet, and that it would carry those scars later."

I honestly didn't know what to say at this point. Although Silke had been deathly silent since the beginning of the discussion, Suzume seemed to be taking this rather easily. I wasn't entirely surprised, but it made me realize one thing; I wasn't so much amazed at her self-control anymore than I was starting to suspect she was just scarred in her own ways. Whatever the case might have been... it felt good not being judged.

"While I have you both here though, I have another important new to share." I raised an eyebrow at the Calidus' sudden shift in topics but didn't mind all too much. The little German on the other hand seemed to finally spring back to life.

The purple-haired Callidus nodded to the Culexus, as if answering a silent question that hadn't been spoken yet. Silke let out a small relieved sigh and relaxed a little more then she usually did. Well, as much "usually" as I've been given to see in my limited time with them.

"Thanks goodness, they've been gone for a long time now..." the Culexus said in a matching tone that earned her another small nod of approbation from the much taller girl. I didn't really know what was going on, but I assumed they had more... colleagues coming back from... somewhere, which was about it.

"Mind letting me know what you're talking about." I tilted my head slightly and asked with a level tone.

"Why, but it's so much more fun to keep you in the dark..." Suzume gave a slightly wry smile and somehow managed to not sound horrendously smug while saying so. It didn't really help because I still wanted to punch her.

"Yes, yes, very cute. If you're going to be like this I'm just going to go for a walk." I leaned to my side onto the armrest and rested my cheek on the palm of one of my hands.

"You take walks?" the Callidus seemed genuinely surprised. "I thought you just messed around all the time doing nothing."

"Very enthusiastic walks."

"I can't help but feel like you're trying to tell me something here."

"That's no good Tatsuki." Silke stepped in with a little bit of a scolding voice. "D...don't say that." What. How the fuck did -she- of all people get it? Suzume seemed to share my confusion for a moment, but for different reasons. "A-anyways, I'll explain." The little Culexus cleared her throat.

"Two friends of ours have been overseas for an extended period of time for a job in South America. " she recomposed herself quickly as she explained. "We've been waiting for them to return for a while now because their job ended up taking longer than originally planned..." her voice trailed off, probably with concern but her vox-caster was doing its thing again so I couldn't really tell for sure.

"Irina and Roza Tsukanov." Suzume completed calmly. "Both are Vindicares from Russia."

"Sisters eh?" I leaned back. I usually liked everything Russia-flavored, especially their Magical Girls, so it sounded like a duo I'd like to... meet, yeah, that's what I meant, meet...

Suzume however laughed slightly at my comment and I raised an eyebrow. "Don't let their similar appearance fool you" she continued. "They have nothing in common except their blood and their pride."

"All the more fun to discover" I smirked lightly and reached for my inventory for a refreshment.

Suzume simply shrugged. "-Do- try not to get in the way of their rivalry. It's never pretty when people do." I raised an eyebrow once more. I was used to pseudo-cryptic shit from the Callidus, but what was with that?

"What do you mean?" I asked with a demanding tone.

Silke seemed like she wanted to respond for a moment, leaning forwards slightly and perhaps searching for her words, but she didn't make it in time and Suzume responded before she could place a word. "The Tsukanov sisters have been in competition for as long as I've known them and longer still before that. It's a Vindicare thing I suppose, but they've been arguing over who's weapon and style is the most efficient and have never managed to settle the quarrel."

I nodded lightly and took another gulp of vodka. For a split second she eyed my bottle and took a sip of the cup of wine she had been neglecting for a while, as if seeing me drink suddenly reminded her that thirst was a thing that existed. She then continued: "It gets pretty bad at times and if you take one's side then the other will take it personal. It's what forced them to leave their Officio; one too many 'incident'. The rest you'll have to ask them yourself I'm afraid."

I nodded lightly, taking in the information. "So, besides that little landmine, how -are- they actually like?"

"Irina is the elder." Suzume shifted her position lightly and crossed her legs, giving a shameless display of her stockings. "She uses a bow and is usually composed, a little bit like me actually, but not as quick on her feet~" Silke coughed slightly, looked like she wasn't all that in agreement.

"Irina just doesn't like to let her emotions show, unlike you." Silke spoke up, giving the Callidus a scolding tone she usually reserved for me. "Besides, taking time to consider the situation is a good thing too..."

Suzume gave her a small but warm smile and for once I felt like it wasn't a facade." Sorry~sorry, I got a little carried away~" she spoke in a melodic voice different than her usual measured, nigh-calculating one. The Culexus just nodded, giving a small "as long as you understand". Cute.

Without giving her time to continue, Silke spoke up and took the relay. "Roza is the younger sister, she uses all sorts of guns and firearms and is a little more.. brash.. a little like -you- I suppose." I raised an eyebrow at that comment. Was that supposed to mean something specific? I just shrugged off the last part.

I gave a small nod, that seemed to be good enough information to at least just tell them apart. Didn't need to be all creepy and stalker-like by asking a ton of stuff. Besides I did believe in what I said earlier about the fun of finding things out first-hand, so this was just fine. I remained quiet for a moment longer, just contemplating in silence when a glance at the Callidus gave me an idea. A terrible idea.

"So, I've been thinking for a while..." not really, but it opens conversations well. "Those disguises things you Callidae do." I looked to Suzume in emphasis. "Is that something you actually train like us Eversors do or is it an innate thing from your contract like for Culexi?"

Suzume joined her hands over her lap and gave me another of those scrutinizing looks like she was observing me very carefully without letting too much of it show. Silke tilted her head slightly, seeming a little confused, but the Callidus remained neutral as always. "Technically, yes, technically. But why would you want to know that I wonder?"

I shrugged lightly, trying to keep an equally neutral expression. For once I wasn't failing; being indifferent towards things was something I was pretty good at so I didn't need to fake much "Eh just wondering." I stretched my arms and shoulders lightly. "I mean besides the obvious it sounds like picking up a trick or two could be pretty useful."

"Ooh?" Suzume's smile widened and her eyes lit up with a small light that I recognized well; it was a predatorian one. "And what kind of tricks do -you- think would be useful?" she teased.

"Well, I'm pretty sure you can -see- a few" I smirked, deciding to enter her little mind game for now. I was of course referring to my unnatural eyes and hands that could use being hidden sometimes

"I do believe I can" she brought a lone finger to her lips. "But it would break my heart to see such things abused for pointless or selfish reasons."
[7/8]

Abusing for selfish reasons? I was under the impression she was doing that -all the time- so it was pretty hypocritical of her to say something like that, but I didn't speak up my mind. This was a game after all, or so I believed we decided, so I remained level and smiled back. Silke herself seemed hopelessly confused, glancing between the two of us in succession.

"Oh that's alright, we're having a strictly professional talk between reasonable people aren't we?" I allowed my own neutral expression to form a small smile.

"Of course we are, and in that kind of professional talk there's no place for any ulterior motives now would there be?" this time I wasn't sure what to make of Suzume's tone and expression. I enjoyed being able to figure people out as a hobby, but it wasn't something I actually trained at.

"No, no, no place for that indeed." I chuckled softly and had to suppress the urge to laugh when the German Culexus threw her hands in the air in what I can only imagine to be either frustration or surrender before flopping down onto the couch on her front. "I wouldn't have any such things."

"You're lyin' outta your ass." The Callidus' eyes narrowed as she replied with an uncharacteristically rough demeanor.

"Oh bullshit" I finally exclaimed with some degree of exasperation myself. "Like -you- aren't all the time." I then slumped against the armrest and reached for my neglected Vodka to freshen my lips.

"I totally am." Wait what? "You pass." Wait -what-?

The purple-haired Callidus took a sip of her wine as well and her expression softened. "Callidus business is all about deceit and manipulation. If you want to have -any- hopes at it you -have- to be an at least decent liar." Well, that made sense I guess. "It's been a long time since I've taught anyone though. I used to be an Instructor and the Rank Leader's aide in the Third." Well if that wasn't a lie then it meant she at least knew what she was talking about. Where did the lies stop or begin anyway with her? I was starting to regret my decision already; these things are harder than Eversor training.

"Well, sounds good to me." I shrugged lightly. "Just let me know when you have some time."

Suzume simply nodded. She was hiding it of course, but my guts told me the smile she wore right now was a genuinely pleased one. My mind wandered for a little; did she do this kind of things a lot back in the Third? did she miss it? Ultimately all those questions only left me realizing just how little I really knew about these girls beyond our... "professional relationship".

Mercy Killing 3: Daybreak

The hunt had begun. A Vanus, an Eversor and a Callidus, assembled by midnight, not by choice but forced by circumstance. True, they were fortunate in that the River had produced a vision of her entering this barrier. A mixed blessing at best; it would mean that they had no choice but to assume the vision was both correct and current, and enter immediately, lest they give her a chance to escape.

The dead of night. Hardly an ideal time to search for a hidden enemy, much less in a witch's barrier.

Izuho took point ahead of the Katayamas, examining the witch's sigil through the filter of an ill-fitting pair of night vision goggles. There was no disguising the reason for her presence here, as clear to her as it was to the others. That, then, would explain the sheer concern Harumi had shown when she relayed the mission to them. It was unnecessary, of course. This was the logical choice.

She stood head and shoulders above the Katayamas and appeared a good deal more threatening; it was a safe assumption that she would take a good few more shots than the others if it came to that. In combat, too, she would dispose of familiars more quickly than they could hope to, and with her soul gem hidden within her ever-regenerating body, few could think to threaten her. She was here to protect, then, and to be riddled with claws and bolts in the service of those more valuable than herself. Little more than a human shield.

And that was as well. It would not do if either of the two were hurt.

"I believe we were meant to meet at midnight. Yumishita is running late," Mitsuko quips behind her, prompting a little chuckle from her sister. More than welcome distractions from trying to make sense of this sigil, standing out in the cold night air. A pair of gates, wide open, with a path of thorns both behind and ahead of it. Ringed with words that she could not decipher, that Mitsuko refused to examine for more than a moment. Words radiating a sense of profound anger and disappointment, directed not at herself, but at... at what? The witch herself? Fear, too. Fear without direction, all-pervading, until the witch had created this barrier to shut herself away from the merciless barbs of the world.

It hardly mattered, and they could waste no more time. There was work to be done. Izuho rises to her feet, metal clanking and cloth rustling as the moonlight shines on the patches of scales and reflective carapace that had recently grown around the scars on her arms. A temporary chance like so many others, it would pass in time. Motioning for the others to follow, she steps through the portal and into the barrier, with the two joining her a moment later.

The goggles, as it turns out, are entirely unnecessary, even blinding. They stagger dizzily, swaying back and forth in the bright light of the sun that greeted them. Blue skies and shining daylight all around, as far as the eye can see, with not a cloud above. The only blemish, then, is the sun itself. While it graces the world with its gentle warmth, it shows itself as a swollen mass of orange and red, an overgrown flame that bleeds dripping blackened ichor onto the world below. Great droplets of the strange substance, almost reminiscent of crude oil in appearance, slip away from the star's countless gashes and cuts, only to hurtle down and splash against the ground. At least they were nowhere near this... bizarre material.

Memories. Somehow, they all knew, almost instinctively. Collecting little by little on the barrier's ground as they were bled away by... what, exactly?

The answer comes from their surroundings, the same half-idyllic landscape that turns, under further scrutiny, into the face of a nightmare. They stand in the midst of a series of rice paddies with only ankle-length water, while ahead of them, colossal books form a tunnel of sorts, open wide with their spines facing the sky. Houses new and old propped up the gargantuan pages; small apartments of concrete and steel, sprawling thatched-roof farmhouses and stocky brick cottages stand side by side with their doors wide open. They knew better than to even consider entering, of course.

Ahead, towering skyscrapers - not, at a glance, entirely unlike QB Heavy's office buildings, if distorted by heat haze - grasp at the heavens, spires that would have pierced the clouds, had there been any. Somehow, they held the air of a dream too distant to reach, and a dangerous trap all at once.

They were not alone in the barrier. Far from it. They had known that when entering, naturally, but there was more to this place than a witch and a renegade. Every stalk of rice, every rustling page and sturdy brick, every clod of earth underfoot, and the featureless humanoid shadows that flitted to and fro. Each and every one screamed abuse at the heavens, their words daggers of condemnation, with hatred and guilt as the poisons of their choice. At times they were physical words, in that strange and baffling script peculiar to witches. Other times, the fury and loathing was given voice, equally inscrutable, leaving the air riddled with words and the ears filled with an angry din. Each one cut into the witch as it reached her, drawing some of what passed for her blood now.

Most importantly, standing here in the open, they were exposed. The nigh-immediate crossbow bolt landing in one of Izuho's shoulders was proof enough of that, only moments after they had taken in the scene. It didn't hurt, not more than countless other wounds had before it. Practice made perfect, and where that was not true, it at least had the courtesy to create numbness.

"Get under the books!" She shouted, an unusually assertive call to action that rallied the Katayamas immediately. Shadows wrapped around them in defiance of the sun's glare, almost solid, bolts slowing within them as though it were water. Hands of animated mud and earth rise from the ground to meet the Eversor's pleas for their help, otherwise lost to the din, and crumble as they grasp shots only to find themselves unequal to the task.

A harrowing sprint led them below the comforting shelter of bewitched paper. The familiars watch them impassively for now, as though they are mere curiosities that have no place here, a momentary distraction. They were not the objects of the creatures' rage, and so they passed without incident in that regard. Still, curiously, they found themselves weakening, as if withering in the barrier's thin air, taking it in in ragged gasps as they ran. Was this part of Yumishita's powers as well? If so, then it seemed to abate ever so slightly as they found shade under the arcade of books.

"...Don't look," Mizuki cautioned, as her elder sister glanced up towards the pages. That way lay madness. Witches were strange, inhuman creatures, though Harumi - when pressed - had once told them all that they were capable of transforming ordinary, unwitting humans into one of their ranks. How fortunate, then, that they were exempt and needed only to fear a more direct sort of harm. A barrier's words, regardless, were not to be trusted, and no good could come of trying to understand the beasts.

It was their duty to destroy these monsters that could only bring harm to the world. This, the sisters had known since their first days at the Third, and even before then.

The bolt flying through the book, heralded only by the agonised scream of the familiar it pierced, comes as a rude awakening to them all. The Eversor is the first to act, interposing herself between the shot and Mitsuko before grasping it in one hand. She flashes a triumphant smile at the Callidus even through the pain, still managing to take some amount of pride in her work. That shot would not have struck her soul gem, no, but it was the principle of the matter. Her pride is short-lived, however, as she notes the grey-green sphere affixed to the crossbow bolt, and the sharp ticking.

"...Stay back, please." A clenched fist and gritted teeth. Those, alongside the sight of her squadmates scattering from her, are the only courtesies, the only comfort she receives before the end of the countdown.

A second later, the bloody firework consumes her entire right arm, held out from her. The conflagration reduces flesh and bone alike to a mess of gore and smoke. Flecks of white, red and black spattered across the ground, carried by a nauseating stench and lingering embers. The agony was overwhelming, and even she was left bent double from the shock, but only for a moment. She had learned to use her soul gem's power to dull the pain long ago, though she used it sparingly, with how many grief seeds she needed at the best of times. A moment later, her eyes catch sight of Mizuki, looking as though she was about to either vomit or cry, her costume coated with blood and pieces of what had once been Izuho's right arm.

Somehow, her first reaction had been to mumble an apology. An apology for inconveniencing her squadmate with the detonated remnants of her own arm. At least it made the Callidus laugh. That was good enough.

"Can you hide us?" She asked.

"I'm trying already, she shouldn't be able to-"

"She already HAS, obviously," the Vanus snapped. "The roof can't stop her and neither can you. We need to move. Taniguchi, you can walk, right?"

Of course she could. Now running, that would be far more difficult, but when had that stopped her? ...At least her arm was already coming back. As she knew it would. The sickening sounds of regrown, reknitted meat and bone twisting into new shapes was one she could never grow used to, but then, this was never the time to be picky. No time was. It was still raw, the skin left unformed for the moment, and oddly stiff. Was that a tooth she saw on the back of her wrist? ...It would have to do, as long as the arm worked. She had grown used to the constant mutations long ago, overzealous indulgences of a shell housing more life than one body was ever meant to contain.

The cover of shadows does nothing to stem the merciless barrage from above, raining down with uncanny accuracy, some of them resembling steel rebar or a siege engine's payload more than any ordinary crossbow bolt. Even an Eversor's reflexes are not perfect, and eventually the Katayamas sustain some wounds, quickly sealed at the cost of Izuho's own overflowing life, cuts and sores appearing along her skin as she heals them. Fortunately, nothing had struck their soul gems yet, shrunk down to a ring on Mizuki and a necklace for Mitsuko.

"Hold your ground," the Vanus suddenly announces to perplexed stares. "We don't know where she is. I can change that, but I need time. I need to be able to focus. Can you keep me alive for long enough?" A pair of nods meet the demand. What else could they say?

The darkness bubbles up from the ground, joined my mud and stone, creating a dome around them. It might have been a wall, but somehow, despite the constant assault, they could never seem to trace their attacker. Could a Vindicare become invisible as some among the Callidus rank could? There is no time to ponder the question, now. Instead, the barrier creaks and shakes, crumbling little by little with each thunderous, inexplicably jackhammer-like shot that impacts against its shell. Life to protect life, a soothing gloom to shield the innocent from what they need neither see nor feel.

"I have it," the Vanus announces eventually, amidst the ruins of their shelter. A beam of the sun's own light, in accordance with her own affinity, called down to reveal the traitor's position. Standing atop the books, with a scoped crossbow at the ready. Had she been there a moment ago? How could they be so blind, when the sniper hid in plain sight? Still, she was not far away. They would only need to-

Any further thoughts are cut off by one bloodcurdling shriek, then another, hateful wails across the barrier as the familiars that inhabit and compose it see the beam of redirected and channeled sunlight, screaming in absolute fury. Their quarry, the object of their loathing had been found, tainted, corrupted by the touch of those who had not yet lost themselves. This would not stand. They had not yet crushed the sun and bled it dry, not yet made it weep its last tears of pitch for its sins. These outsiders would not be allowed to steal their prisoner away.

Somewhere, Mitsuko had said something, coughing up tar-like liquid and staring with bloodshot eyes as if she had seen the unspeakable. Her words are lost in the din, one cry among many that do not reach the Eversor, as she pulls out the remnants of a rusted broadsword from her own leg, a handle of bone and bleeding skin forming where the blade ended. In the same motion, she hurls it at the distant Vindicare, looking for only long enough to confirm that she has hit her mark, just barely. A dodge, in a technical sense, but a scrap of cloth had fallen to the ground. That was all they would need to scry on her later. Already, Yumishita was departing, but that was not their concern.

With another barked order - her usual timidity, she knew, had no place here when leading a pair relatively unaccustomed to the front lines - she sends the Katayamas scrambling to retrieve the scrap, while Mizuki's illusions obscure them from the horde of familiars. She could feel the heat growing, the same draining sensation that sapped her energy growing ever stronger, almost crippling as she struggles to avoid falling to her knees. The familiars surge in from every direction, looking as though the entire barrier is collapsing to strike her down.

With a gasp of effort, she extends the weapons buried within her - the souvenirs of countless past battles - from her own skin, in an excruciating bladed carapace that cut her foes simply by striding through them, a monstrosity of misshapen flesh and old steel.

How many had she killed?

How many times had she been struck down, her body torn limb from limb only to grow back?

How much of her strength had left her, in gasps and whimpers, as broken iron and spirit proved too weak to hold off the hordes?

How many bodies did she stand atop, by the end, and how many more circled her as her squadmates made their reluctant escape?

It didn't matter. None of it seemed to matter at all, by then. In the end, she welcomed the witch, and took her hand willingly, floating up into the air.

The sun. Of course. It was so obvious, now; the radiance that had siphoned away their strength throughout their stay in the barrier. Was that a face she could make out in the flame's lacerated, bleeding depths? It had to be real, like the hand of magic and smoldering gas that gripped her own, terribly weak one. They floated higher and higher, but it must have been nothing. Breathing seemed a distant, pointless luxury now. Surely she would make do without. The witch wished only for company, someone who would stand by her side against the ruthless familiars. Who was she to deny that?

[9/11]

The witch was darkening, at long last. Shrinking, as the soft eyes within the inferno - the same grip that burned her skin away and turned her to ash, ever so slowly and gently - dimmed to nothing. ...A sun could only take so much before buckling. Collapsing under the weight it had shouldered, becoming crushed by those who would heap intolerably heavy condemnations upon it. Even a witch - a monster that knew hunger in the place of remorse and cruelty in the place of compassion - could not shoulder this blame. It could only survive by becoming something else. Darker, smaller, gathering the entire world around itself in the hope that even one part of it could cling to her and provide some small measure of comfort.

So this was how it ended, then. The invulnerable juggernaut of the Third, embraced by the heart of the sun that would soon be reduced to a single black point.

"What's your name?"

It must have been human, once. She almost felt as though she had seen the face, once upon a time. Who was she? What was her life like? The world would never know, now. A story fated to end in a place set apart from the world of all that was right and good. A tale spun to its last in a nightmare beside reality. She could not read the sigils, but she heard the witch's murmur, the whisper of a desperate furnace, and she smiled.

"...It's a good name."

Little by little, she burned away. It didn't matter, the body could be replaced. Instead, she grips the miniature sun in both arms, and stares into the molten eyes.

"...Don't worry, it's going to be okay. This won't hurt for much longer."

She reached in, through excruciating heat that could not hope to pierce the dream-like haze she found herself in. The baying of the familiars below seemed so distant and quiet now, so terribly meaningless. Flames wrap around her, and eventually, her hand of seared bone finds purchase on... something, deep within the sun. Was it a heart? It must be. As close as such a broken, pitiful beast could come to having one. And to think she had always been taught that witches were heartless. She squeezed, of course, as hard as her broken, skeletal claw of a hand could. Crushed it between her fingers. What else could she have done? The fires dimmed, the world drained of colour, and the face faded away with her vision.

"I'm sorry."

When they found her in the morning, collapsed in the street beside the grief seed she had refused to use, she would only say that the witch had thanked her, and refuse to speak further of that day.

So ended the hunt.

Five Red Petals
Chapter One - Promise of Reunion

Garry was the first one I met.

Called him last week. Turned out he was actually going to be in town for a while, so I decided to arrange a friendly little meet. After what happened at the art gallery, I happened to run into him again only just a few years ago. He was even carrying around my old handkerchief, all clean and my name somehow not faded away. Since then, we've been keeping in touch.

Last time we met was… two, three months ago? Can't remember off the top of my head. He's gotten much older, but still has that messy purple hair over his left eye, and a bit less pale than he used to be, too, I think. Or maybe he was still the same?

A minute past noon, he walked in, and I waved him over. Gave me a wave before buying himself some coffee. His hair was a bit straighter than I last remembered, but he still wore a blue coat. Wasn't the same rugged coat from back then, but it was still blue. He also wore glasses now, chrome half-rims. If I didn't know him, I'd think he was the biggest hipster, especially since he was in his early 20s.

"Been a while."

"Mmm. What've you been up to?"

"Nothing much, really. The usual. You?"

Garry shrugged, swallowing another mouthful of his drink. "I'm down here for a job. I'm supposed to help the nearby college with some project, so depending on how that goes, I might end up moving down here." He gave me a warm smile.

That's nice, I guess. Source of income and everything. Though I wasn't too sure how I felt about the possibility of seeing him more often now, even if we were already kind of close from what happened like… four years ago.

He chuckled. “So what about you? How’s the whole magical girl deal going?” I was already contracted by the time I met him for the first time after the art gallery. Though he didn’t exactly approve, he trusted me enough to take care of myself. Said something about being a brave little girl, which I visually punched him for.

“Mm… same stuff, different day.” I’ve only been a magical girl for two years, but things are starting to get more or less routine. Girls come and go, but it’s still… pretty much the same. Not that I don’t miss some of the people that’ve gone.

“Don’t you ever think about how young you are for something like that, though?” He had a point. Everyone I was around was like… in the sixteen to nineteen range, and I was just about starting my teen years, ordering older recruits around, getting funny looks. Wendy was only two years older than me, though, so I wasn’t entirely alone.

“I mean… it’s not like I’m bad at my job. Besides, I’m going on a mission where I’m pretty sure I won’t be in command.”

“Somewhere in… um… the Northeast. Not really allowed to say.”

“Somewhere?” He raised an eyebrow. “That’s awfully vague. Then, why are you going?” It was actually hard to tell what face he was doing, what, with only half his face showing.

Asking all the hard questions, huh. Well, if he guessed anything correctly, I wasn’t going to lie to him. No point. I was kind of half hoping he’d be able to know exactly where I was going, actually. Especially since Varrigan City was a legendary shithole of sorts.

“Reasons.” I swallowed another mouthful of tea. English breakfast was great.

“Well…” Garry’s gaze wandered, as if the answer would be written on the wall behind me. “At least you’re not going to Varrigan, right?”

Ahaha, shit. Was that a wild guess? Maybe he was just really good at reading me. Like a book. With semi-legible handwriting.

“Haha… funny that you mention that, actually…” I let my voice die into my cup. Water looks really weird sometimes.

He set down his cup, looking around to see if anyone heard.

“W-What? Are you… you’re… you’re not going to commit a huge crime or anything, are you?”

“Well… well, no.” My cup was quickly draining. “There’s the occasional authorized incursion for anyone who wants to try surviving. A proof of courage, or something like that.” His frown dropped even deeper.

“So, why’re you going?”

“I want to try it again.”

“…What?”

“I want to try it again.

Garry stared blankly at me. Took him a bit to realize what I was talking about.

“‘It’… the art gallery?”

I nodded. “Self test of iron will.”

“Eve,” he chuckled to himself here, like he couldn’t believe what he was hearing, “you’ve already done that back… 4 years ago now?”

“Yeah, but you were there to protect me. Not that I’m ungrateful, I just want to prove to myself that I can do it alone.” Hopefully he’s not taking offense. I’d sip at my tea again, but I might look a bit smug doing that. That’d be bad.

He sighed. “I mean, I can’t stop you, but… I… I can’t help but worry. You know, with the way it is. Only really, really bad criminals get thrown in maximum security prisons. And you’re thirteen, Eve.”

“I know, but I’m going with a few people,” I wasn’t actually sure how many people would be coming along, “and I’m a, well, you know. I’ll be fine. Just wanted to let you know in case, well, something does happen and you can’t contact me. I promise to be alive, at least, though.”

“That sounds an awful lot like someone’s last words.” Garry stared at his cup, trying to take it all in with another gulp of cappuccino. Took a few big gulps.

“Well,” I finally gave myself the liberty of finishing my drink, “at least… I’ll be alive at the end.”

God, I was awful at lines like that.

I eventually saw him off. Garry had work to get to, but said we could talk after I came back. He still wasn’t happy about me going, but decided that if I could make it through the art gallery without being a magical girl, then being would be just as good as his protection.

Not sure how I felt about that, but I guess it’s the thought that counts.

Soul gems are certainly more sturdy than roses, at least. I think.

Even though I made a note to tell Wendy I was going to Varrigan, too, I ended up in my room, hugging a pillow at my desk, lost in my own little world of soft beats and smooth rhythm. Though she wasn’t in the room too often, my roommate was… insufferable. Loud, inconsiderate… quietness in my room was something to treasure.

Ended up doing nothing for the better part of an hour. I should really be packing… emailing important people…

Three sharp knocks at my door.

…Yeah, I think I’ll get on that now. Starting with the emails.

I pushed my chair over to the door, quickly flipping the knob to let the door open for anyone to let themself in, then slid back to my desk. Is that even a word, themself?

Email client… compose email…

“…Eve.” …That wasn’t my roommate’s voice. I quickly turned around…

…and looked up just as fast. There stood Wendy, hiding her face behind her scarf.

“Oh, uh. Hi. Sorry.” I hate when that happened. Always makes it looks like the guest isn’t welcome or something.

“Hey. Here.” She reached into her inventory an stuffed what looked like a sketchbook of sorts into my hands. It even had a cute rose engraved on the front.

I began flipping through the pages. Weird drawings of sorts - a bunch of patterned eggs, people with eyes for heads, birdladies, and a… thing with too many arms. I guess they look kind of like what Wendy's told me about sometimes, when we'd just be together doing nothing. I had my guesses as to what this was supposed to be for, but I just wanted to make sure.

"Um…"

"If, uh," she started "If you're in trouble, just. Just let me know, and I'll make sure you're out of there, stat. Alright?"

I gave her a nod. Not sure how I'd do that, but again, I guess it's the thought that counts.

How did she hear that I was going, anyways? I hadn't told her anything at all, even though I'd been meaning to. Not that I didn't want her to know or anything.

"Everyone who goes turns into a mini-celebrity for however long." Oh. Well, I guess that makes sense, since the whole Varrigan City expeditions thing were still kind of new.

"I…" I looked to the right. I scooted around and sat on my bed behind her, and Wendy turned around. "How do you feel about me going?"

"Just stay safe. I trust you, but if you need help, use the book or call me. Probably both. Hopefully let me know first." Her voice faded as she ended her sentence, as if she was suddenly deciding on saying something. Was there something secret about the book? How am I supposed to let her know, anyways? Not like there's any phones in-

Wendy's hand ruffled my hair, and she quickly left the room.

Huh.

I should probably finish up those emails.

..:: AUREA VENEN || PART 1 || THE GREEN ROAD ::..

<Why....? Why did you run away?> The girl in front of me seemed to utter, as if in a trance. <You could have saved us... It didn't have to end like this...>

The young brunette girl stood like a statue, a dark stain on the front of her costume blossoming along the surface of the fabric. She went on to repeat the same thing, in the haunting manner she had been speaking in many times already. It wasn't the first time this had played out before me, and it probably wouldn't be the last, but I've already lost count of the occurrences. Yet, I found it funny. I didn't really have it in me to laugh, nor could I understand what exactly was funny about it. All I knew, was that she wasn't real. There's no way she could be real, after all.

<I--> The blood started to trickle from the corners of her mouth, and then as if a recording had been rewound, it started over again. 'It's okay', I told myself, over and over. It's okay, because she isn't real, don't worry. I tore my gaze away from her, looking out towards the cityscape which appeared to be clipped straight out of a picture book.

The stars in the night sky seemed to fade in and out, appearing as various different colors each time they regained visibility. Looking down, the pathway I had been following was made out of thin and obscenely green wooden planks. While their incessant creaking and groaning was extremely loud to my ears, they still felt solid enough underfoot to traverse. It was the only guidance this black void gave me, though it was never enough to distance myself from the girl's phantom. Where was this path leading me? Away? From--

I winced at the sudden sharp pain, the hand I instinctively brought up to my temple brushing black hair out of its way. My head felt dull, my memory nothing but a dark haze akin to the one that enveloped my surroundings. I can't remember what happened. I can't remember why I can't remember.

<Why did you run away?> I can't even remember the name of the brunette girl, even though she had been my partner for years. That was where it stopped being funny, and where I lost the desire to laugh at all. This was serious, this entire goddamn mission was--

Wait, mission? We were sent here to this...shithole of a city, but why? To find what? It certainly wasn't this green pathway. <It didn't have to end like this...> Why was it so green? No seriously, wood planks aren't supposed to be this green, even if you painted them. It doesn't even LOOK like wood! Alright, calm down, it's not a big deal. Deep breath, try to remember....what was the mission? Why did we come here?

<I--> I glanced back over at the broken record that was my 'partner', blood oozing out of the corners of her eyes, and in the same instance resetting again. What do you want from me? Why are you appearing here, saying the same thing over and over!?

Dying in front of me...over and OVER like this, I can't-- It was then that I noticed something was different about her, and stopped in my tracks. She was holding a small, creepy looking doll in her hands. It looked very fancy, possibly made from porcelain, with bright red marble eyes and a well kempt head of blond hair. Not just fancy or expensive though, it looked...real. It seemed...familiar, but...where the hell did it come from? Where have I seen it before? I'm one hundred percent sure this was the first time I've EVER seen it, yet at the same time I felt like I've seen it so many times before.

"Ufufufu~" The doll's eyes blink, its mouth twisting into a gut wrenching smirk as it begins to clap its hands together and giggle. Each time her hands came together, it made a metal clang that seemed to echo around me, ringing in my head like a bell. I know I've seen this doll before, or at least, the person that it resembles.

I know I've heard this sound before. I KNOW that I know. Pain once more wells up in my head, causing me to whimper softly. Think, damnit, remember! The clanging grows louder, and I reopen my eyes to see my 'partner' slowly walking towards me, the doll still in tow.

<Why did you run away?> I had to run, I had no choice. <You could have saved us...> There's no way I could have saved you, I couldn't save even one person, let alone everyone else in the squad. <It didn't have to end like this...> I know... God damn it, I know!

The girl ceased her approach directly in front of me, the entire front of her orange costume stained a dark crimson. The doll's eyes bore holes into mine, her freakish grin never wavering for a second. I know... I know what you're going to say. You don't have to remind me, it's the one thing I could never forget after all.

<I loved you.> Yet despite knowing what she would say, my eyes still widened. It was then that she shoved me back, my foot unable to shift to stop myself from falling. What was once a continuation of the green path behind me was now empty air, and I fell.

I could only look up at her from below, and even though she already was so distant, I could still make out the tears of red that she shed once again. Then she was gone, as if a light had been flipped off where she had stood. They told us it was an easy mission, that we'd go in and make it back in time for dinner. All we had to do was find the girl and get rid of her, then we'd get paid and be done with it. They lied. They knew. They knew and yet they still SENT US.

"Look who I found!" A sweet voice called out from the darkness below me, extremely crisp and clear unlike the phantom's. As if my back had hit the ground with a sickening crunch, a large metal pole impaled itself through my chest. I couldn't really feel it, but I knew it hurt like a bitch. I knew I was screaming, but I couldn't even hear that.

"You know, you're reallllyy bad at this whole hide and seek thing. You're not supposed to walk around out in the open, silly." They lied to us, there's no way this was a mission our amateur squad could handle. There's no way they didn't know this. Everyone else....she...

"Don't worry though! You were the last one to be found, you know what that means right?" It's then that her hands, metal and inhuman in appearance, uncovered my eyes and moved to rest on my shoulders. My eyes quickly adjusted to the dim light from the street lamp, as she stepped in front of me, her appearance a near perfect match to the doll I had seen earlier.

My entire body was frozen, I wanted to run....to hide. I had to get away from her, she was the one. "You get the special prize~" She whispered, before she forcibly pressed her lips against mine, a tingling sensation running through my body.

The soft and warm sensation lingered for a moment, and was instantly wiped out from the wrenching pain in my chest as the metal blade was violently removed from my body, the resulting scream muffled into the kiss. IT HURTS! OH GOD, IT HURTS SO MUCH!! WHY DOES IT HURT SO MUCH!?

It was only a moment longer before she pulled away, letting out a familiar giggle. "Oh dear, that's right, I gave that same prize to your cute brown haired girlfriend already. Ah~! Speaking of her, I know just the thing to make your prize unique after all."

A feeling of dread washed over me amidst my writhing, blood beginning to leak from the corner of my mouth as I could only slowly shake my head. It hurt too much to even breath, let alone give voice to my fears. The girl fumbled with her hand for a moment, before removing a ring from one of her devilish fingers.

My heart stopped as it morphed into the egg-shaped jewel I'd seen so many times before, the once bright orange color almost completely consumed by a shade of black inside it. The golden haired girl dropped it into my shaky hands, stepping back from me, her equally devilish metal legs noisily clanging against the pavement.

"I sorta used her a bit too much and broke her, sorry about that~!" She giggled again, giving a small curtsy. "I just can't help myself sometimes. You know how it is. But anyways, I'll leave you two to your touching reunion. It won't be much longer now."

Even before she wandered off, I had already long stopped listening, entirely focused on the soul gem in my hands. I'm sorry... I collapsed to my knees, soaked in my own blood, murmuring my apology. I couldn't even feel its weight anymore. Actually, I couldn't really feel much of anything anymore, not even the tears running down my cheeks. I could only repeat my apologies to it -- to her, as the soul gem collapsed in on itself.

I have to admit though, 3+ lengthy write-ups every single thread like the past weeks (months?) doesn't seem very conducive to getting anons actually reading them. Well, the pastebin posts will also feature the first part of their writeup (as much as the character limit for one post will allow) and the pastebin link itself, so anyone who gets their curiosity piqued by the preview can follow the link for more!

It's the same as posting your writeup here, except just in one post! I think it'll be an improvement!

That' true but they can link their pastes anyway.

Basically since it's all at the end, limiting how many doesn't really do too much to prevent thread clutter since usually there are approximately zero posts after the write-ups are posted anyway.

And for actually making the write-ups inviting, both the current 'masht hem all together into a wall of text after people have just finished reading a long thread already' and relegating them to the awful reading experience that is pastebin (in addition to the natural barrier of effort a link provides) are both terrible ways to do it, but I can't think of much better ones.

The problem with writeups is a tricky one. I doubt keeping them to pastebins will solve it, and I'm the one who suggested it. But what the other anon said about the wall of text is definitely true, and that means there IS a problem that needs to be addressed.

Another part of the problem is that there isn't a particularly effective archive of all of the writeups on their own. I know there's a list on the MGNQ wiki, but that's not particularly well-advertised in the threads or on anybody's twitter, and it's still a bit of a wall of text.

Anyway, I like the rotation thing. Link to pastebin sounds like nobody will read it.

Pastebink links also mean no artfagging to go with them.

You're absolutely right, and that's another part of the reason I wasn't particularly happy with my own suggestion.

But in the end, there are just too many writefags for the thread, and we need some alternate solution to just posting five writeups after every thread.

Pastebin's out then. I like the pics.

Though I would like to see pastebin links for the writefags somewhere, perhaps at the end of each chapter.

>>36163503
Yeah, there are lots of writefags and they all produce content faster than Decu's threadmaking speed can handle, that's really all there is to it.

>> ☐ Wendy Cooldown 11/14/14(Fri)16:38:07 No.36163557

>>36163510
Yeah, the pastebin link is a good idea and I think it's just something we forget to do.

Setting up a rotation might be the way to go, but honestly I think a lot of this is just a ton of new writers showing up with a ton of content, and I think they'll inevitably slow down a touch once the first burst is through the door. Seems to be happening somewhat already.

That failing, setting up a schedule/rotation or just saying 'Hey, you're gonna have to post next thread instead, sorry' could work.

MAGICAL GIRL NOIR QUEST
THE FALL OF CHIAKI MATSUDA

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 11/16/14(Sun)09:33:40 No.36200835 Archived

You allow yourself a small smile, before shaking your head. ...You don't really know if you want to have kids. In fact, the thought had never crossed your mind until now. You've always thought that you would never have time for that kind of thing, even before becoming Warmaster. YOu were resigned to the fact that you'd either be dead or Witched Out by the time you were eligible for retirement.

What's it like, anyway? Being...pregnant and everything.

"Oh, it is disgusting! Absolutely disgusting!" Kharn cackles. "Every day I am having to say hello to last night's dinner because of morning sickness! And then, there are strange and mysterious fluids leaking out of you from down there whenever you so much as sneeze, or cough, or even just think about how nice it is to be having clean underwear on for one..."

Wait, what? That's...that's how being with child is like? But you thought--

>>36200835

"Oh, that is not the worst bit, Murderface!" Your former Warmaster shakes her head. "See, you get an appetite for the most unhealthy and disgusting things! You get, ah, how do they say it..." Kharn snaps her brutally-clawed fingers. "...Cravings! Yes, cravings for the most disgusting things. Like for example, raw bear meat! No cooking, not even a minute on the grill, just as raw and as bloody as it can get! That, and orange juice with coffee!"

Okay, the raw bear steak thing you can understand, but orange juice with coffee doesn't sound too bad--

"Without sugar! Or vodka!"

...Alright, you're officially sick right now. No. No more. You shake your head at Kharn, holding up a hand in surrender, the other clapped over your mouth. No more, for fuck's sake!

"Ahaha, but it is not all bad, Murderface!" It's here that Kharn's expression grows soft, almost tender, as she looks down at her blouse-encased belly and brushes her claws over the small but obvious bump.

"I know you will laugh at me for this, I am sure you are already doing so - but there is life inside me, Murderface. Life that my own body has made, and not by the clumsy machinations of Venenum or even the corruption that has turned me this way." She shakes her head, giggling to herself. "A-ahaha, listen to me, I do not even believe I am talking like this, I do not--"

It's here, suddenly and abruptly, that Kharn blinks - and then laughs, blushing. "Murderface! Comrade Murderface, they are kicking! They are saying hello!" She looks down at herself, and whispers something in Russian that manages to sound almost affectionate. "Naughty children, interrupting your mother talking to your godmother like that!"

You stared at her, then. You couldn't help it. Sitting there in your office, dripping wet from your interrupted bath with only a towel for modesty, you stared as the person that was once known as the most terrifying Magical Girl ever contracted in history - for that one single moment - didn't look like the the skull-taking, blonde-conquering monster that she was.

For that one moment, she stopped looking like a sharp-toothed, black-clawed, long-tongued thing from someone's nightmares made manifest and more of the young woman that she was supposed to be. The mother she is now becoming.

Before the whims of incubators and broken, cackling goddesses stole everything away from her.

...Well, anyway. You clear your throat awkwardly after a few moments, trying to shake off the feeling that you're intruding upon a very private moment - before finally managing to tell Kharn that if you wanted to throw up every morning, then you'd just go back to your old habits.

"Ah, so that is a definite no, then, Murderface?" The dark-haired, black-eyed Russian chuckles, and it's here that you feel Midori's eyes on you, the hand on your shoulder tightening somewhat. ...Heh.

"Not exactly." You reply. "But something I'll definitely be thinking about."

Kharn explodes into laughter here, just as you catch Midori's inward gasp - and succeeding panicked breathing - behind you. "Ahahaha! Well, I am looking forward to seeing you make that big decision, my friend! Maybe, when our little rascals are out and unleashed into the world, we can schedule playdates or something, eh? Hahaha!"

You smirk, shaking your head at the impossibility of it. ...Well, impossible or not, it doesn't sound all that bad. Besides, you know, babies generally being annoying as all hell and a pain to take care of besides.

The call goes on for a few more minutes, with Kharn mostly grilling you on how the Officio's getting along. It ends with the former Warmaster grinning and talking like the tension from earlier didn't exist at all - and if it did, it was something that she'd already shaken off.

"Do not let me keep you for too long, Murderface. I know I interrupted something very special, so I will end the call now." She'd cackled. "Whatever you decide to do, I wish you good luck in your approaching hunt. I will call again soon. The Blessed Lady protects." You winced just slightly at her goodbye, but wished her the same luck with her pregnancy before the call finally disconnected.

Well. That was a...strange call, you note as the screen of your laptop goes black. Of course, Kharn had always been strange, but to see her and hear her so...afraid of something, to the point of tears - that was something you'd never thought you'd see, besides her being a happy mother. And the way she kept looking down and clasping her hands over her stomach--

You shake your head. Not the time for that. Definitely something you have to ask about later, but not when you still have a Prophet to save. And a bath to finish.

"...Sempai?" Midori murmurs your name, just as you stand up from your seat - and you blink as you turn towards her. She's still blushing, that much is clear, but she seems to have just finished crying, too. Wiping her eyes with one of the ends of the towel she'd wrapped around herself. "Did...did you really mean that? About...h-having k-ki...k-kuh..."

...Kids? You finish for her. The green-haired Callidus nods after a moment, now so embarrassed that she's hiding her face behind the bit of towel she'd been sniffling into.

Ah. Huh. Well...

How do you respond?

[]Well, do you want kids? Because if you do, you're the one having them.
[]It's a bit too early to think about that, isn't it?
[]We'll see. Now, let's see about finishing that bath.

Midori's problem with kids is that she tries too hard and isn't firm enough. On the other hand, she seems to have gotten a handle on Misaka, so that's a step forward for her and her anti-kid aura

You consider Midori for a second, before shrugging. Does SHE want kids, then? Because if she does, she's the one having them.

"E-EH?!" The green-haired Callidus all but shrieks, before clapping her hands over her mouth to muffle the rest of her panicked, blushing outburst. You let Midori squirm and panic for a few delicious moments - carefully keeping your face impassive as you watch her go completely in both embarrassment and confusion - before you put her out of her misery with a tousling of her wet, thick hair.

It's too soon, you tell her as she looks back up at you, crimson eyes wide and staring. Too soon to decide, what with all the bullshit that's been happening - the Prophet, the Golden Weapons, Pinky. You're not exactly opposed to the idea, but if it is going to happen, then you want it to be when all this nonsense is over and done with first.

...Christ, listen to yourself. Months ago you were only worried about where your next paycheck will be coming from - a paycheck that you'd spend on booze and nothing else. Then you became a watch-wearing dildo, suddenly worrying about paperwork and subordinates and all that crap. Now, what, you're actually considering KIDS? Jesus.

"D-don't jerk me around like that, sempai," Midori grumbles as she punches your arm, slowly recovering from your little prank. "But...but I guess sempai's right. I'd like for all of this to be fixed first before, um, before we consider something like that." It's here that she takes your hand, smiling as she does so. "Sorry for suddenly popping that on you, though, sempai. I was just...well, seeing Miss Valnikov being so happy like that, I--"

Jealous?

Midori blushes again, before nodding. "K-kinda, sempai. I'm...I know it looks a certain way, but...well..." She stops here, seemingly taking a conscious effort to do so, before shaking her head and pulling you back towards your quarters. "L-let's just finish your bath, sempai. The bathwater should still be hot, l-let's not let it go to waste!"

You smirk and allow yourself to be pulled along. In truth, you're relieved she's moving on from it, too. ...You don't really mind having kids - at least, with Midori, anyway - but to think that far ahead, after this was all over? That felt like optimism bordering on delusion. You'll do your best to make sure Midori gets through the other side of this entire mess alive and intact, but you're not so sure about yourself.

"Ah, it's still good!" Midori cheers as she dips a hand into the fragrant, steaming water. "Hop in, sempai! It'll fix you right up!"

...Sure, why not, you shrug. A discarded towel and a slow, meandering soak later, and you sigh as the tension in your body ebbs in the scented, heated bath.

Hnn. Not bad. Not bad at all.

But something's missing, you note.

"Eh?" Midori blinks. "W-what's missing, sempai? I made sure everything's--"

Her, you point out. She's not in the water with you.

And there's evidently more than enough room - you bet five people can fit into the damn tub easily.

Midori is silent for a moment, before she smiles and shakes her head. "I...I drew the bath for you, though, sempai. This is supposed to make you relax--"

And you'll be more relaxed with her in the tub, too, you cut her off petulantly, splashing her with a bit of water. Get in, you insist flatly. Warmaster's orders.

"...Jeez." Midori shakes her head again, smiling and blushing at the same time, and she lets her towel fall to the floor before climbing in. "What am I going to do with you, sempai...?"

Two hours later - freshly bathed, freshly showered, and freshly dressed - both you and Midori find yourselves back at the Incubator's Office, Muramasa in hand, and along with the rest of the Kill-Team that you've selected.

Half of the rest anyway, with Mami and Wendy still conspicuously absent.

Kyoko and Sayaka, on the other hand, seem to have arrived well before you - the couple clearly preoccupied making last minute checks on their equipment. A quick glance towards them reveals that Kyoko seems to be favoring the gold-plated spear that Misaka had given her long ago - the one with the sharp, angular blade and the underslung gun attachment. Sayaka meanwhile is fiddling with one of the straps securing Blueberry Cheesecake Brownie to her waist, trying to get a better fit.

And in the center of the office itself, standing beside your Incubator as he sat before his array of monitor screens, is the hardsuit-clad form of Chitose Yuma, her helmet's vox-speakers emitting low growls as she conversed with Kyuubey. She notices you staring and gives you a curt nod, which you return.

Well, at least she seems to be up and about, you note. With the wounds she sustained and the subsequent three-day operation she went through, you're impressed that she's pushing for this mission almost immediately after waking up.

"I'll go and check on Kyuubey-san while we wait Mami-san and the rest, sempai," Midori squeezes your hand, before stepping past you to join Yuma beside your Incubator. Both mutant cat and Culexus turning to acknowledge your Callidus' entrance, which Midori herself marks with a polite, yet elegant bow. ...Something she learned from Mami again, too, no doubt.

What do you do now? You can talk to some people, or wait until it's time for the mission briefing.

Is it odd that I want Chiaki to be the "girl" in the relationship once in a while? With that I mean that I want her to wear the bride's dress when she marries. Midori and the rest of the Watermelon can wear the groom's.

Also, as for the meguca reproduction, I can't believe nobody suggested they Luminous.

You leave Midori to continue her conversation with Yuma and Kyuubey, and walk over to Kyoko and Sayaka instead - the two Eversors now doing last-minute checks on each other's gear. Your best friend looking up to grin at you just as Sayaka tightens what appears to be a shoulder holster around the red-haired Eversor, one already bearing two rather oversized ammo magazines of some unknown caliber.

"Yo, Murderface!" Kyoko greets you cheerfully, before wincing as your Equerry cinches her holster around her frame with a sharp pull of one of its straps. "O-ow! W-wait, Sayaka, I think that's too tight! I can't breathe!"

"It has to be tight, idiot, or else it'll fall off. Either put up with it or stop eating so much." The Blueberry snaps in reply from behind your best friend, before turning to look at you. "Guess who finally decided to show up. Took your own time, did you, Murderface?" Her eyes stray to the Muramasa in your hands, and you could see her lips twist into her trademark disapproving frown as she takes in your rather...negligent way of carrying it around. "Want a waist holster for that? Looks like you'll need it. What's your dominant hand?"

...Well, you're not sure about that, but you shoot your Desert Eagle with your left hand most of the time, so--

"Here. Wear it on your left, since you've already got a gun holster on your right, anyway." Sayaka tosses you a thing of thick straps and metal buckles, and after a bit of time and confusion, you pull it on. You slip Muramasa through its utilitarian sword loop, and surprisingly enough, it fits perfectly.

"No need to thank me, I just hate seeing a sword like that being carted around like a fucking rifle." Your Equerry smirks at your grateful expression, earning her an elbow at the side from your best friend. "Ghh. I clearly meant to say, 'you're welcome'. Really. No joke. Kyoko, stop fidgeting, dammit!"

Right. Well. It's still pretty handy.

Orders? You blink. But you haven't even said anything!

"You were thinking it, though." Kyoko chimes in, grinning. "Er...no, I ain't readin' your mind or anythin', Murderface, but we kinda know what a superior officer looks like when she's about to order us to do something completely stupid."

"Right." Sayaka nods. "And right now, you look exactly like that. So, out with it, Warmaster. What do you have for us?"

How do you respond?

You take a deep breath and tell your Equerry and your best friend about what you learned from Kharn. Not everything, of course - you leave out the bit where Kharn specified Kyoko - but enough. Enough for them them to know and realize the deadly seriousness of the situation, one that has one of your Kill-Team's lives at stake.

To their credit, both Eversors take it well enough, Kyoko's one eye merely widening in silence but then nodding in acknowledgement, just as Sayaka did.

"Figures there'd be a catch like that," Your Equerry growls underneath her breath. "You've got all this bullshit with the Prophet and the Golden Weapons, and then there's this Akashic Realm thing on top of all this. And we had to hear it from Kharn of all people. Great."

She shakes her head. "Fine. I don't like it, but fine. Any one of us gets downed before you get Oriko, I'll bring them along with me, too. Just..." Sayaka looks at you, hard. Her own eyes, blue as polar ice and twice as cold, bores into yours. "Are you sure about this? I mean, it'll suck if we don't get to save Oriko, but maybe if we just--"

No. You shake your head. Kharn tried that same tack with you during her call, and you're having none of it. You promised you'd do all you can first. You promised you'd save her.

"Alright, alright. No need to chew my fucking head off, Murderface." Sayaka holds up both hands in surrender. "Everyone'll be out before you do whatever it is that'll make Oriko less of a psychopath terrorist than she'll ever become." She puts her hands down and nods grudgingly. "Thanks."

Right. What about Kyoko, then?

"I'm...I'm good, Murderface. I gotcha." Kyoko flashes you a grin and a thumbs-up sign, but you can tell her heart's not in it. For one, she looks as pale as a sheet. "Whatever kinda crazy stuff ya got planned, I'm sure it'll pan out."

She shakes her head a moment later. "...Sorry for pressurin' you to do this, by the way. ...Saving Oriko, I mean. I made a really big deal about it, and I think that got your attention, but, you know. If it's...if it ain't on the cards, it ain't on the cards, and I don't wanna trade my best friend for another. Alright, Murderface?"

You nod, before bumping fists with Kyoko. You'll do your best, you tell her. You'll try anything first, and then when all your options are spent and nothing's working, it's only then that you'll go for the kill-stroke.

Kyoko nods here, murmuring thanks in gratitude. With nothing else to talk about - Sayaka now seemingly in the middle of contemplative prayer, and Kyoko still having a bit of a problem with her gear - you help your best friend get her stuff straightened out until the mission briefing finally begins with a clearing of Kyuubey's throat.

At the same time, the remaining members of your Kill-Team finally arrive.

"My apologies, Kyuubey, Warmaster," Mami says breathlessly as she steps forward, impossibly elegant even in her hurry, Wendy in tow - and your own breath catches in your throat as you see her, once more, in the subtle beauty of her own Magical Girl costume. "We were slightly delayed due to some issues I needed to deal with personally."

Mami was...well, beautiful. There was no other word for it. After seeing her in her business outfit for so long, that office lady getup that did nothing to flatter the soft, divine physique it was containing - to see Tomoe Mami back in the costume that had made her legendary among all the Twenty Officios was breathtaking.

The ribbed stockings. The short but modestly-primped skirt with the dark offset piping. The slimming, accentuating corset. The detached sleeves, starting from slim fingerless gloves to bare skin, and then continuing once more in a gentle puff of blouse-cloth. Her trademark yellow ribbon, expertly tied. Her furred beret, set far back, along with the flower casing of her Soul Gem. And who could forget, how it was all crowned by a thick, luscious mane of golden-blonde hair, teased into luxurious drills.

Mami. Tomoe Mami. Your personal goddess of victory.

Wendy, of course, was...Wendy. You remember her costume - a pink sweater-dress that ended precariously just above the knee bore her signature strip of checkered squares, a simple two-square row, three squares long, over and across her chest. This checkered theme, of course, is one that's repeated on the other pieces of her costume: her scarf, her stockings, and the big ribbon cinched around her and tied behind her back.

Across her waist and hips are knife-holster straps, crossing over each other, with one doing double-duty with what looks like a beam katana hilt hanging from it, clinking against the sheathed combat knives. It was a costume that, while not definitely as elegant as Mami's, was just as deadly and eye-catching in its own right - and it helped that the girl wearing it looked good in it, too. If only she just stopped looking at you like she wanted your head to explode, or something.

With your entire Kill-Team present, it's here that Kyuubey begins the briefing. Or rather, Yuma does, her vox-amplified voice echoing through the cavernous Office. Your Incubator, who usually takes the lead in this type of thing, seems content to sit back and provide visual assistance through projected holograms, creating them whenever the Culexus needed a point.

Yuma is quick and concise, just like her predecessor. She tells your Kill-Team all it needs to know: how she's going to send the five of you to the exact destination that she learned from Lucius, what the location itself seems to be like, the expected resistance and how she'll be sending you back.

"Corruption only happens during long-term exposure to the Akashic Realm, and this operation should be quick enough for the threat of it to be minimal." Yuma's voice leaves her helmet's speakers in an emotionless, brutalized growl. "I can't provide any info on just what kind of environment you'll be teleporting into, but I do believe that it is an abandoned building or skyscraper. A structure that climbs upward, something like that."

The Culexus reaches up to massage at her throat before she continues. "As I'm sure everyone here knows, our main priority is Mikuni Oriko, also known as the Prophet." At Yuma's pause, Oriko's dossier flickers into being in midair, showing her demurely-smiling face for all to see. Beside Sayaka, you can see Kyoko mumble something before turning away.

"We have reason to believe that she is in command of more than a hundred potential hostiles, as well as having access to a Golden Weapon. This makes her the most dangerous threat we've ever faced so far, so please exercise caution when engaging her." A pause. "Once she's been dealt with, I will bring you out of the Akashic Realm the same way you came. Any questions?"

Well, that sounds easy enough.

How do you respond?

~~Let's try this again!~~

A cry of pain echoed in the halls of the Olympia, Ashlin's screams drowning out the ambient noise. She thrashed about on a surgical table, held down by straps as the Apolakreon surgeons hovered over her.

<What's the situation?>

<Ashlin McHale, Eversor. Scheduled for muscular and skeletal augmentation. Body is in constant pain due to it tearing itself apart. A drawback of her contract it seems.>

<Why couldn't her Officio handle her anymore?>

<It was her decision. Fubey went along with it after she begged him to let her go.> Surgical equipment was pulled in as the surgeons began prepping their patient. <They tried to convince her to stay but...>

"P-please make it stop-o-o-op." The girl's thrashing slowly waned as her strength faded. "I can't take this anymore..."

The fleshwrights grasped their tools as the preparations were finished. <Very well, if that is the task we were given, let's get to it.>

An Irish Girl's Wish Part 2: Guard Duty

~~~~~~~~~~~

"WAKE UP, LADIES!"
~~~~~~~~~~~

Ashlin woke with a jolt, her emerald eyes slowly adjusting to the light as her confusion waned. A tall, slim figure stood in the doorway, silhouetted by the sunlight seeping in. The rest of the girls immediately slipped off their hammocks, awake and standing in seconds.

The figure stepped forward into the quarters proper, her grey metal form giving off a gleam in the light. "McHale, what's takin' you so long?!"

"Oh, uh, sorry!" Ashlin slipped out of bed, her panty and bra clad body flashing as her steel blue armor turned over her. Stumbling over her clawed feet and feathery skirt tail, Ashlin quickly stood next to the other girls.

"When I say get up, I mean GET UP! Do you understand me?!"

The five girls all nodded with confirmation as the sleek, grey Ironform began pacing around the front of them. "My name is Lyssa Forax. I'm the head of this project and until further notice, you will answer to me." Her androgynous form watched the girls closely, silver-blue LED eyes glowing brightly. "The memorial project is very important and I will not have anyone running around without my say."

Maria coughed gently, getting Lyssa's attention. "Umm, permission to speak, ma'am?"

"Granted."

"What about Miss Stroud? She's the Eversor leader here, right?"

"Did I fucking stutter?" Lyssa quickly slid in front of Maria, standing nose to nose with the 6' 2" red head. "Unless otherwise noted, you will answer to me. If I give an order, you will follow it. If Leah gives you an order, you will follow it unless I say otherwise." Stepping away, Lyssa scoffed at the anger coming from Maria's eyes. "DO I MAKE MYSELF CLEAR?"

The girls bellowed out a unified 'yes ma'am' as Lyssa stood in front of them all. "Very well. As was discussed yesterday, four of you will break into two-man teams and rotate 12 hour watch shifts. Maria and Edea will take the sunrise to sunset, and Ashlin and Natalie will take sunset to sunrise." Lyssa then crossed her arms, staring at the group. "Any objections?"

Natalie spat, gritting her teeth. "Why do I have to do guard duty with the coward?" She jabbed a finger towards Ashlin, giving the young Irish girl a quick glare. "She'd probably run at the first sight of trouble."

Lyssa stared at Natalie, giving quick glances to Ashlin as she spoke. "You don't get along with Ashlin I take it?"

"'Don't get along'? That's putting it lightly. I'd say it's more of a borderline hatred." She crossed her arms, scoffing at Ashlin. "You should've seen her on the few training sessions I've done with her. She's a waste of space."

"Well, there's a good reason the Warsmith sent her instead of someone else, and I intend to find out." With a quick turn around, Lyssa began to exit the sleeping quarters after giving one last quip. "Oh, and you'll still be doing watch duty alongside Ashlin. Disobey, and you will be punished accordingly." The door closed with a slam, making Natalie jump in surprise.

"That...that fucking bitch!" Natalie stomped her feet and clenched her fists, a look of frustration smeared over her face. "Why am I stuck working with Ashlin?"

Edea let out a long sigh, looking tired of Natalie's shit. "What do you have against her anyways, huh? Really, Ash has done nothing wrong to you, yet you treat the girl like she's less than trash!"

"Have you seen her fight? As I said yesterday, she can't fight worth a damn! I've trained with her before, to test my reflex augs, and all she did was block and dodge. She didn't even TRY to fight back!"

Maria stepped between the two girls, holding them at arms length. "Edea, I'll handle this, okay?" She turned to face Natalie, her eyes nearly drilling a hole through the grey eyed Eversor. "I told you yesterday, not to make me tell you to calm your shit." Maria narrowed her eyes, clearly angered. "You gonna make me tell you again?"

"No, no, I'm calm as all hell. I'm just pissed that I have to deal with HER every night."

"You want to disobey a direct order?"

Natalie opened her mouth to retort before clamping it shut. She pondered for a moment before turning to the girl she loathed. "You keep to your shit and keep your eyes open. I'll have no problems if you can AT LEAST do that."

Ashlin nodded her head quickly. "I'll do my best!"

"Well, you two," Maria yawned and stretched, pointing to the door. "Edea and I have to get started on our shift. Get some extra rest if you can, since you'll be on watch all night."

The two new night watchers nodded as Edea and Maria began their first shift.

~~~~~~~~~~~

The compound entrance's overlook, while simple by design, provided efficient cover and viewing for whoever was on guard. Six inch thick steel crenelated walls surrounded and protected the compound, and the entire top jutted out to deter would-be climbers and ladder attempts.

Maria examined the mesh catwalk, running her hands over the steel hand rails. "Hmm, decent setup they have here. Pretty open at the front and the mountains behind provide decent cover from the rear."

"You know people can still come OVER the mountain, right? It's not as if the rear is impenetrable."

Maria looked at her partner, a sly smirk registering on her face. "You would know how that feels, wouldn't you?"

"N-not while we're outside, please. I reeeally don't want anyone eavesdropping on our private conversations." Edea blushed lightly as she stepped forward, leaning on the railing. "Besides, I thought you didn't talk about that stuff out in the open?"

"Fine, fine." The tall redhead slid behind her shorter lover, embracing her over the shoulders. "You win this time, shorty."
~~~~~~~~~~~

The young magical girl couple stayed in their embrace as they watched the sun slowly make its way up the horizon. The rock and grassy plains ahead of them were silent, save for the mid-spring breeze and the rustling of grass.

Maria nuzzled her face into Edea's golden locks, taking in the scent of her hair. "I thought I was going to lose you, ya know."

"Hmm?"

"During Walpurgisnacht. I thought you were going to die..."

Edea rubbed her head against Maria's ample bosom, making the latter scrunch her nose. "We've been over this before, hun. It's in the past, no need to worry yourself over it, 'kay?"

"Yeah, but-" Maria gripped her pint-sized lover tighter. "-but even thinking about it scares me."

"Hey, I'm right here." The blonde Eversor held Maria tighter, lifting her head to look deeply into her Maria's eyes. A small, gentle smile rested on her lips. "I'm fine. Not to mention, if I didn't get hurt, we wouldn't be here, ya know?"

Maria held Edea's gaze for a moment before she, too, made a little grin. "Yeah...heh, I still remember how scared you were just to get those prostheses." She giggled as she brushed a stray lock of hair from Edea's face, giving her a coy, teasing look. "You were all like 'but what if it hurts?! What if my arm and leg take over me!?'."

Edea slid around, lightly punching Maria's chest with her still fleshy hand. "Stop making fun of meeee."

Maria chuckled, tousling what hair of Edea's that wasn't tied back. "I can't help it, it's fun to pick on you sometimes." Her expression then turned serious as she stared into Edea's golden yellow eyes. "Any word on your brother's condition?"

"No. Not for a while. Don't think word got to them that I transferred. I'm glad Kyuubey allowed me to keep tabs on my family, but it's hard when I'm away for a while."

"And with everyone recovering after Walpurgis, that's probably not high on his priority list...Miss Malal would have already taken care of it as soon as the transfer was final, I bet."

"I miss them, you know." Edea closed her eyes, resting her forehead against Maria's chest. "We lost so many..."

"I miss'em too. A lot of brave girls died protecting their loved ones. That's why we're building this monument in their memory." Maria held her companion close, the redhead's eyes watching the horizon. "As long as we keep their memory alive, we will never be alone."

"Damn thing's been on the fritz for a while now. Can't be assed to fix it, with everything that's happened."

"So, what did you need me for, Miss Forax?" The nun fidgeted in her seat, her usually dark skin growing pale from nervousness. "Is it something important?"

The grey metal Ironform sat back down in her swivel chair, spinning herself slowly. "I have some questions and a request. The Warsmith told me the real reason you're here." Nokota squeaked, her eyes becoming wide and still. "So it was that big of a secret, eh? Considering what it is, I'm not surprised."
~~~~~~~~~~

"Please Miss Forax-"

"Lyssa."

"Miss Lyssa, please don't let this out. It could jeopardize my entire operation!"

"No worries. I may not like meatbags like you, but an order is an order. The Warsmith gave the information to myself only. As long as you keep out of trouble, you should be fine."

"Now about your tasks around here..." Lyssa flicked her fingers, producing small streams of light that formed a hologram. "I want you to assist me with inventory and general control of this op." The hologram came together more clearly, revealing a list. Names of various metals, construction materials, and miscellaneous items scrolled by, some with 'ETA 6 Days' next to them.

"Inventory? But I'm here for negotiations. And my mission."

"Yes, yes, but you're not going to be sitting here doing nothing on my watch. I highly doubt you'll need to do much negotiating anyways." Clanging her metal fingers together, Lyssa closed the hologram list, staring intently at the young nun. "So, you have inventory duty. And whatever else I feel I'll need help with. Am I clear?"

Before Nokota could respond, a loud thump came from the right hand wall, making both girls jump. A louder thump and muffled shouting made them stand up, both eyeing the wall next to the Eversor quarters.

"What the hell is going on in there?"

~~~~~~~~~~

The Eversor quarters were quiet, save for Natalie's exercise induced grunts. Ashlin laid on her hammock, drawn into a book.

Natalie jumped up from doing her push-ups, sweat dripping off her scantily clad body. "Hah...hah...you know, Ashlin, if you don't do some kind of exercise, you'll wind up getting flabby and weak. Why haven't you been doing anything? I've never seen you do any kind of exercise."

Ashlin's eyes darted up from her book, her eyes focusing on her companion. "Oh, umm, I really...can't do stuff like that." Her eyes darted to the side, nervousness overcoming her face. "I wind up getting hurt bad."

"That's because you don't do anything. Your body isn't used to exercise, of course it's going to hurt."

"That's not what I mean. I...get really hurt, like I'm out for a few days kind of hurt."

Natalie narrowed her eyes, not satisfied with the statement. "Because you don't do things properly." She trotted over to Ashlin's hammock, standing over the younger magical girl. "Or is everyone from the 17th like that? Weak, spineless, and unable to do anything on their own without fucking up?" Natalie quickly smacked the book out of Ashlin's hands, the book making a small THUMP against the far wall. "Or maybe, just maybe, it's just you."

Ashlin stared up into Natalie's eyes, her face contorting between anger and fear. "What the hell, Nat?" She attempted to get up to retrieve her book, only to be blocked. "Just let me read, please!"

The silver eyed magical girl stood her ground, moving to stop Ashlin from venturing forward. Snatching a hand that attempted to push her away, she once again brought herself nose to nose with Ashlin's face. "This is why no one wants to be your friend. You're too cowardly and can't even make a move against me."

Ashlin yelped in pain as Natalie twisted the captive girls hand slightly. "H-hey, that hurts! Stop it!" She tried to pull away, but Natalie's iron grip didn't relent. "God dammit, what the hell is wrong with you?!"
~~~~~~~~~~

"You are, that's what. Always scared, can't fight back. Why were you even sent here?"

Ashlin glared at her agitator, her mind clouded in anger and her eyes clouded in tears. Without so much as a thought, she belted out a line that was uncharacteristic of herself. "Why were YOU sent here?! All the Tenth knows how to do is kill! It's not like they can actually PROTECT anything, let alo-"

Next thing Ashlin knew, she was sent across the room, slamming into the far wall next to Leah's quarters with a loud THUMP. She slid to the floor, pain shooting through her jaw as her eyes focused on Natalie.

"You do NOT speak of her like that, YOU GOT ME?!"

Natalie stormed over, her breath becoming ragged. She looked down upon the Irish girl, eyes filled with rage and words filled with venom. "YOU KNOW NOTHING! AND YOU HAVE NO RIGHT TO TALK ABOUT HER. EVER." She kicked Ashlin's face, blood splattering from her nose. "I WON'T LET YOU INSULT THEM LIKE THAT!" Straddling the bloodied girls stomach, Natalie began laying punches across Ashlin's face. "I WON'T LET YOU INSULT -HER- LIKE THAT!"

Ashlin tried to block the blows, but only succeeded in pissing off her attacker more. In between the pain, her tears, and the blood, she saw a sight that she thought she'd never see; Natalie was crying. Her eyes were filled with fury, but covered in the familiar wetness Ashlin knew too well.

Before either could do anything more, the quarters door burst open, Lyssa and Nokota rushing in. They froze in their tracks as they spotted the fight in front of them.

"WHAT IN THE FUCK IS GOING ON IN HERE?!"

Natalie stopped mid-swing as she spotted her superior and the 14th's emissary. She quickly bolted to her feet, leaving the sobbing and bleeding Ashlin on the floor. "This isn't-"

Lyssa's eyes glowed bright as her digitized voice filled the room. "I WANT TO KNOW WHY YOU ARE BEATING ASHLIN'S FACE IN. RIGHT NOW."

"I, uh, we just-"

Lyssa stormed forward, nose to nose with the black haired Eversor. "STOP YOUR GODDAMN STUTTERING AND GET TO IT!" Glancing over to Nokota, Lyssa motioned towards Ashlin, the stunned nun quickly tending to the bloodied girl.

"Sh-she insulted a friend of m-mine! I wasn't gonna stand for that!"

"So you felt it was necessary to beat her face in!?"

"It-just-"

"No. You're coming with me and you're telling me everything. Now." Lyssa grabbed Natalie's arm and began dragging her away. "Nokota, take Ashlin and get her cleaned up. I'll want to talk to her too."

"Yes, Miss Forax." Nokota helped Ashlin up, some of the still fresh blood smearing her outfit. "Come on Ash, let's get you fixed up, 'kay?"

~~~~~~~~~~

"So, what happened Ash?" Nokota gently wiped the blood off of Ashlin's face, careful to avoid her broken nose. "Why was Natalie hitting you?"

Ashlin sobbed in pain, wincing from the pressure. "I th-think I said something bad about her old friends." She took a deep breath, calming herself through the pain. "I didn't mean to upset her..."

Both girls stayed quiet as Nokota finished cleaning the blood and spun Ashlin to face her. "This may hurt a little, okay?" She grabbed her oval choker Soul Gem, focusing the magic through her hands to heal Ashlin's nose. The girl cried out as the bone and tissue slowly healed back together. "There, all done~. Can you breath better?"
~~~~~~~~~~

Ashlin nodded, staring at the floor of the general supplies building. She wiped her tears away as she took another deep breath. "Did I do the wrong thing?"

"The wrong thing? No honey, no." The nun pulled Ashlin's bangs aside, gently patting the girl's head. "But I do think you could've went about expressing your anger a little different."

"Yeah, but...but every time I get angry, I cry and want to run away."

Nokota pulled Ashlin into a hug, holding the girl tightly. "Everyone does that from time to time. No need to worry yourself over it, okay?" The two then sat in silence, a somber air taking hold of the room.

"...Nokota, am I a coward?"

"Hmm?"

Ashlin looked up into Nokota's blue eyes, tears coming up into her own again. "A-am I a coward?"

Nokota chuckled gently, wiping a few black bangs from Ashlin's face. "No, I don't think you are. You stood up to Natalie last night and you did SOMETHING to make her hurt you, so you're obviously not willing to run away."

"But why do I feel like I'm still a coward? I thought when you contracted, your wish came true?"

"Oh? What was your wish?"

"...I wished to be as strong and brave as my dad..." Ashlin began to sob as her few memories of her father came to her mind. "I-I've always been scared of everything; but my dad, he was the strongest and bravest man I knew."

Nokota thought for a moment. "Maybe he wasn't as-"

"No! You're wrong!" The emerald eye Eversor glared at Nokota. "My dad is the bravest a-and he...and he..." Her sobs grew greater, drowning out whatever words she wanted to say.

Nokota just smiled as Ashlin began to cry harder, burying her face into the nuns small chest. "It's fine Ashlin. Just let it all out, okay?" She gently stroked Ashlin's hair, the young Irish girl muttering lightly to herself.

"Daddy...I miss you."

..:: AUREA VENEN || PART 2 || SERZAH & CYNN ::..

To this day, I'm still not sure how everything could have gone so wrong. Not even a year ago I was just a normal girl, living a normal life in this city -- now a shitty shadow of its former self. I had a place to call home, a stable family, and numerous friends.

Yet as I stretched my arms, the dark metal extremities whining from the motion, none of it seemed to really matter anymore. The city went to shit and became infested with abominations of man-made origin, bringing terror and slaughter in their wake. That's what I've become a part of, in a single instance that I can't even remember happening, and it's now my 'normality'. I imagine that's what it feels like to wake up in a holding cell one day and find you've turned into a monster with black metal shit for limbs; not to mention the...urges. Of the friends I had, the ones who weren't already dead, I'd probably end up tearing to pieces myself - or worse.

The chair I'm sitting in -- as comfortably as I can manage -- creaks a bit as I lean back against it, the leather rather cold against my bare back. Aside from my legs and shoulders, that was the only place this excuse for a magical girl costume didn't cover. It could be worse, arguably, but that doesn't stop it from being rather detestable to wear. It even has all this frilly stuff on the front which just gets in the way. It'd be fine if you were wearing it to look cute, maybe even a bit sexy, but in battle the results would probably not be as attractive.

I rake the metal claws through a portion of my hair, being careful not to accidentally gouge myself as I've done in the past, when I hear a rustle at the doorway.

In a blur of motion, a length of black metal pierced through the chair and stretched to the doorway, said length being one of the two tails idly swaying around me prior. The fleshy crunch behind me confirmed that I had hit on the mark, and I turned to look at the unfortunate victi--oh...

"...That makes for the second time jus' ta'day, Serzah! Ya' kiddin' me!?" The small girl with the large hypodermic needle now jammed through her right thigh placed her hands against her hips. What could be seen of her brow behind the mask she 'wore' was clearly furrowed. I sighed in relief after realizing who I had just impaled, the rather nasty wound I had inflicted on her wasn't showing any signs of bleeding.

"You should know better by now not to sneak around in the dark like that, Cynn. I'm still on edge after the last dirty little Calli that tried to kill me. Ahh~ She sure was pretty cute though once I /stripped/ her of her stealthing~"

With a rather sickeningly moist pop, the needle was pulled back out, returning to join its fidgeting twin. My hand slid along its segmented form, curving it around to my lap where I began to meticulously clean off what gore did end up on it with a nearby rag. Even monsters should keep their weapons in good shape. "I apologize though, only because you're cute."

"'Cause I'm cute..." She reiterated, still sounding rather peeved with me, "...saying that may work on me, but it won't get'cha out of every bit of trouble ya' bring upon ya'self. Also, I was'n sneakin' around, I was coming ta' say hello, for ya' information." After she finished her lecture, she walked over to me, flopping her small frame straight into my lap. Her leg was already completely healed, as if the wound had never existed in the first place, as expected of a fellow Ven.

"Hey, I'm trying to clean your blood and shit from my tail, move it." I chided her, which just made her twist and wiggle around, splaying herself across the combination of my lap and the chair's armrests. "Nope, this is ya' punishment for ya' mistake. It's what'cha get for makin' me waste meds, ya' know." It wasn't possible to tell through the large beak-shaped mask, but I knew underneath it she must have had some sort of smirk on her face just from the tone of her voice. I scowled down at her a bit, before relenting and going back to my tail cleaning, small girl in the way or not.

"Gotta say though, ya' lap is pretty comfy, what with all the metal bits an' such. Bit stiff, but otherwise comfy."

"No one asked you. You're lucky that you're wearing that mask." I said with a small grin plastered on my face.

"I'm lucky? That's a pretty random thing ta' say." Her fingers coming up to fiddle with the edge of the large hole in the mask's design. It was the only portion that didn't cover her face, primarily focused on her left eye. "I like ta' think that this mask is ma' best fea'cha, not ta' mention it looks cool."

"Let's just say I don't think I'd be able to hold back. Thus why I say you're lucky~"

"Oh my, how intimidatin', ya'd do such terrible things ta' ya' close an' only friend, eh?"

"You say I don't have any other friends as if it were a bad thing. If I wasn't concerned with poking an eye out, I'd kiss you right now as return punishment." The clawed finger of my right hand came up to prod against the white stained apron of Cynn's costume, making a point to not accidentally tear the fabric with it. "You'd better watch your butt, sis."

"Hehehe, always such a kidda'." She giggled, giving my cheek a playful slap with her hand. I was silently glad she wasn't an Ever, as that would have stung like a bitch if she was. Trust me, you never want to be slapped by an Ever--ever.

"So have ya' seen any of the other sista's around? They've been pretty quiet lately, ya'?"

I shook my head after briefly considering if I had or not. It had only been a few months since the incident, so most of the surviving sisters were probably laying low, now that they'd tasted their freedom. Once the chaos from all the gangs and the few remaining magical girls died down completely, that would be the time to return to the playing field. At least, that's what I had decided was the most appropriate course of action, and I imagine Cynn agreed. "Nah, haven't seen them at all. In a way, I sort of don't want to."

Cynn's facial movements hinted at a mixture of a frown and confusion -- mostly confusion. "Why? They're our sista's, they are'n interested in hurtin' us, and we could even work togetha' to survive!" Upon the exclamation, she threw her arms above her head, her way of emphasizing the optimistic declaration. The way she said these sorts of things was so adorable, that it made me wish I wasn't such a pessimist sometimes.

"I know, but who knows how long that'll last? Right now, at least, I don't think it's a good idea at all. Too many people are jumpy and itching to kill, best to just leave them to their own devices until the flames die out."

"Mmmm.... I suppose ya' have a point, especially some o' them... Pretty craz--" I suddenly held up a finger to my lips, signaling her to be quiet. It was pretty faint but I'm sure I heard voices down the hall, and this being an abandoned building, could only mean company.

After a moment longer, sure enough, it sounded like a group of people were walking towards our side of the floor. I gave Cynn a further signal for her to duck behind something and hide, and she slipped off my lap to do such. As for myself, I moved behind the musty bookshelf adjacent to the door, as quietly as my metal legs could allow me to that is. My tails were curved back, ready to greet anyone who decided to poke their face a little too far through the door frame.

"All right, bitches, listen up. This is as good as place as any to hole up for the night, but you gotta make damn well sure it's clear first. Don't fuck this up or you won't wake up in the morning, evac is coming to bring us out of this hellhole at 0700 sharp, got that!?" The voice echoed down the hall very clearly, not too far away from my position.

"Yes ma'am!"

Oh great, it's a squad of them. Fucking brilliant.

Riddle of Witch Flesh part 7

Panna raised her arms and made a single loud clap with them, as to break Martina out of the trance. "So," she had said, "what have we learned?".

Martina massaged her eyes a bit, and looked at her. "That stuff happened. That's not how you teach anything, though. You've left out the part where you always tell us what to think." That's right. Facts are boring without perspective. You need to add an opinion. People learn from comparing opinions, and all that.

The gypsy had responded first with a nod. "I believe we have already gotten yours, unless you'd like to add something. I can add mine, then we can listen to what the others think."

Toyen had commented on that with an incredibly annoyed expression, raising her face from the table. "Fuck, I know this. The point of this is going to be that the truth is in the middle and that nothing is anobody's fault. Yeah, Panna, that's totally fucking watertight."

Martina was too interested to let Toy derail the conversation, though. "Let's all agree it's the cat's fault and move on." Usually, we think alike. I still had something to confirm, though.

"So, if I understand this correctly, she was a Witch hunter and nothing else. Did the same job as me, except without a right to vacation."

"Yes." Panna answered right away, since she had probably expected the question. "Extermination of newborn Witches. That is what the Warmaster of Twelfth does."

"How many did she kill?"

Again, she replied without a second thought. "Let's see. The exact number would be in her file, but I'd say a bit over five hundred would be about right."

Toyen gave that a low whistle. It really was amazing. "Shit, that's four every day. If it's all in the four months, then she's giving even the Second and the Sixth a run for their money. Is that, like, all the Witches we make?"

[1/14]

>> ☐ Ratmie 11/16/14(Sun)15:54:27 No.36206100

"We make a lot more. They get rid of much of ours already. Along with the Fourteenth." Having sat on the edge until now, she sat deeper back in the chair. She must have been feeling tipsy, too.

It seemed quite far fetched to me, though. "Numbers are cool and all, but Witches can be pretty deadly. Did you really have one person with no assistance handle so many? Sounds stupid." It made me feel useless, too.

All the time, I am complaining that Witches are too crazy to reliably approach from the tactical standpoint, and there was a girl that brute forced her way through hordes of them, just behind the corner? Looks like power does beat technique in the long run.

"Yes. Despite the lethality, a Warmaster of Twelfth stays for four months at minimum. At least so far. Well, I wouldn't risk deploying her against an alpha, because that's a suicide mission every time. There had been ninety of these so far, though obviously, they weren't called Warmasters until the Officio system was established, so the ones that didn't last as long don't count. It really all began when the potion came in use. Juunibei contracted a lot of girls over the years, and they've formed several groups. I do believe that the Potion is why he chose the one I led, the Cult of the Black Rose, to be the one that forms the Officio's core."

"So, ninety, by four... that makes you... at least forty years old."

Panna giggled. It might have been something else, but the wrinkles on her face made it hard to tell. We had to assume that she's dying and laughs about it.

"Can't you prolong your life? I mean, you're a Venenum, you've gotta have some ways."

"I do, but I don't like that perspective. It would not be natural". Irony in the room was reaching critical levels. "More seriously, I'd be a brain in a jar sort of a thing. Or a gem, rather. I have sent a lot of people to their end, it would be just distasteful if I couldn't accept mine."

Amazing.

I wan't sure of the extent to which she was joking, but she still touched upon something important. "This is the first time in ever that I've heard you talk morals. If I didn't know you've got grandchildren, I'd have said you're just a psychopath."

Martina joined in with a wry face. "Don't forget what Jackdaw says. Someone so obviously evil cannot possibly be a bad person. Too much evidence."

"It is debatable." Panna had said. "I've only ever gone against the Incubator's wishes once, and that was a very special case. My life is one of making ends meet."

The Vindicare took a moment to stomach that, while Toyen was playing with a cigarette in her hand, frustrated that she can't light it here. "How the fuck are we even going to go about this? Do you want me to like print out a paper with these, like, check boxes, look at my girls, go 'yeah, these dozen are good to go' and then just like pretend to forget to give them Seeds or something?"

This question, in its bluntness, seemed straining to Panna, and even made her shrug. "It's much more complicated than that. This will take time to-"

"I'll listen to that shit later. I've heard just enough that I can walk out on you now." She had straightened up, and rammed her cap, which she would usually cover her millimeter cut hair with, on her scalp. "I've got a standing assignment, and people to stalk. Or something. My boss is the cat, not you, and this time he didn't order me to do what you say. He said to talk to you, and I did. Fuck this, fuck you, I am out."

Martina had opened her mouth on her, and I don't know whether she had meant to tell her to cut it out, or to just remind her of her own shift at the gate in a few hours. Either way, she ended up saying nothing, because Toy wasn't there anymore. Ripples were spreading over the concrete wall she walked into, and she must have already been swimming through the hundred meters of ground and steel, towards the surface.

"Flashy," I've said, "she should have just used the door." What a waste of her reserves.

"She had always known this,", the hag had noted to nobody in particular. "She'll come back. In a way, only flipping out now makes her the biggest hypocrite of us all."

That's hard to argue with. So I didn't. I took a swig instead, the last bottle of beer now almost done with. "It's amazing how you admit that this is being a hypocrite, though."

"See, Jarmila. Hypocrisy is being in a conflict of interests with oneself. And that describes what we do perfectly. But it cannot stop me. Because... well. It's an imperative, I can't reason with this. I've seen the Incubator's purpose, and now it's my own."

She had taken off her crown and turned it around, staring at the Soul Gem in it intently.

"There are causes that go beyond good and evil, beyond right and wrong. The Librarians may look detached from reality, but their field of study is so expansive, it can't be avoided that they get a bit lost. Each of them has a pointer of her own, and when they argue, it's good, because it brings them a bit more together."

I don't even think I remember most of this right, but the next part is clear in my head as day.

"For example, take the Riddle of Witch Flesh. There is a very particular meaning to it. You know the Hegel point theorem, about Witches? The Riddle is tied to it's proof."

That was the thing about quantity becoming quality, right?

"Yes. All mass is attracted to itself and will grow, as a result of a basic universal rule. But there is a point at which it ignites, and transforms. And another, where it collapses. Like a boiling point. The Riddle is like that. There is a power gap, a jump, that makes a Witch become an Alpha. What causes it? It must have to do with emotion, and it must be a special feeling that not every person had ever truly felt. In those handful Magical Girls, it must have been nurtured into full bloom."

[4/14]

>> ☐ Ratmie 11/16/14(Sun)15:57:28 No.36206160

This sounded familiar to Martina. "Are you just talking about love here?"

"I... wouldn't say that. If you had asked me twenty years ago, I would say yes, but now, I am not so sure." Another shrug passed through her face, like she was recalling something unpleasant. "Love, my dear, is like a poison. It's too destructive and messy, too much of a double edged sword, to be the right answer."

The bottom of the bottle was accusatively glaring at me, reminding me of my last - and only - boyfriend. Sometimes, I even have trouble recalling his name. Would you believe that?

"What about faith?" I've proposed, "That seems like a pretty leading human thing to me, maybe it gets passed because you wouldn't normally call it an emotion? I mean, if I get this right, this is all about power. When I look at the Fourteenth, and then us, I see their beliefs making them strong. And we are taught to doubt everything but orders. The point of forcing everyone to read is to encourage critical thinking - and we are weak. How about that?"

Panna had smiled. I've really never seen her display this much emotion, or talk this much. "Belief is a good answer I think, right up there with hope. But neither really satisfies me. Maybe the emotion I am searching for doesn't have a name, or it's something as basic as "awareness" taken to an extreme. An underlying human emotion you wouldn't even know about. My favourite answer at this moment is 'understanding', though."

Martina ran fingers through her bangs, she probably felt pressed to also thing of something smart. "We use it as a meditation puzzle anyway. Like, a question that's meant to be asked, a character defining question."

That's how esoterism is born, I hear. When a question torments you for too long, even a simple one, you make it into a divine mystery in your head. Being governed by something you don't understand, you can't expect others to understand you. So, you lock yourself up in your tower.

[5/14]

>> ☐ Ratmie 11/16/14(Sun)15:58:29 No.36206177

I've completely forgotten about my hatred for Panna at this point. "What about Kamile? She is an Alpha, and she wasn't a love struck girl, or a nun, or anything."

"In Kamile's case, I think, it must have been "fear". She had wished to be a child forever. So, she could never get over such a basic thing. I should have known. She grew, as a child, and the childish fear of the unknown grew with her. You know, I never was like you, a believer. In anything. I never thought persistence had merit. But she proved to me that purity does. Perhaps, if she were at it for an absurdly long time, for thousands of years... I am sure human souls have it in them to surpass even Kamile."

She kept looking at her own soul all the while, just as if it was a holy symbol that confirmed her beliefs.

"Well, not me. Somebody else will have to figure out where it all leads. I should go too. It would be absurd, for me to get emotional."

Following Toy's example, she put the crown back on and stood up, but unlike her, she stopped at the entrance. "I'll tell you the rest later today. Karmic spots inside the city will take a while to go over, I should prepare some maps for it, too. Since I don't feel like dying just yet anymore. There's also the Librarius, that's it's own can of worms." Would we really get access to that? Us?

It seemed that this session was done with, though.

My next steps led to the Archive. I didn't want to give Renata the pleasure of news and the displeasure of being yelled at just yet. It would have been better to prepare for this, and so I've asked the japanese Librarian - her name being 'Umika', as she had already told me many times, and said so with a sour face - for two operative files.

The first had belonged to Karolina Sokołowska. The girl who held her sword like a virgin holds the prick, and then seemed to grow so much further without my guidance. Unsurprisingly, most of that was classified with an A, and stashed elsewhere, so not even I could see it.

I was allowed to get my hands on her background, though.

I've expected an abusive household, and her killing her father or something grim like that, but it wasn't really anything of the sort. Her family was poor, and she ran to fantasy books from her bad grades and lack of other things to do. Then her parents had her to do a retail part time job when she was fifteen, to get money for her family, and that seemed to emotionally drain her enough to agree to the cat.

It's not even inhumane, compared to other stuff that goes on in Poland. Definitely boring, compared to all the other life stories we've got here. Martina's in particular is a real gem of Hussar pride, next to this one. Karolina's story was even boring compared to mine - and it just adds up to my guilt, how meaningless my own case was. In the end, it seems she really did make the wish out of boredom, because she had wanted to spice her life up so desperately.

And did she succeed at that. Kája, you stupid, stupid bitch. You should have just stayed home on your arse. You should have only fenced with nerf swords in your nerd clubs, you should have only been killing monsters in video games.

Who did she kill in the end? I couldn't tell then, but I know that now, so why not say it already. It's not like it affects anything anymore. He was a loan shark's son, twenty six years old. I guess he must have been into something seriously bad if she considered him enough of a monster to kill him with the sword for Witches. The cops just did the "did he have any enemies" thing, and after they went through the list, assumed that it was his father's former client or a hired gun.

>> ☐ Ratmie 11/16/14(Sun)16:00:30 No.36206213

The fact that he was killed without torture, cleanly, by a long blade through the heart, was the slightly baffling part. If I was the detective on that, I'd conclude that he screwed with some sparklies, which was exactly the case.

She must have teleported into Prague from Krakow to do that, though, which proves Panna outright wrong about how much time Kája may have left. Just an interesting note.

I should also say this: Incubators seem to have certain tolerance towards long-time employees. Not everybody is necessarily as trigger happy on civilians as the Assassins or the Murderers, but there's still an us vs. them mentality we have for the normals. This is going to sound awful, but it's the truth: she could have gotten away with straight up murder. She was the goddamned Warmaster, even if only in name, and I somehow doubt Panna would mind, either. As long as Kája did her real job right, didn't get caught red handed, and only did something of the sort once.

There, that's all there is to Kája. Any more words would just further spoil the already miserable tale.

For the second file I've asked for, I had to know the person's name first.

"The girl who left with the circlet this morning? That would be Karla Wagner." Umika sat across me, whatever she was doing in the bookshelves before was not that important, apparently. "Worked right here, in the outer circles. I had her look things up for me a few times. Do you know if she was on meth or something? She really looked that way. Or was she somehow tied to that... Kuchekuchika? I still can't spell her name. It's like a tongue twister. The one that soaks her gem in red absinthe before scrying. The head seer here."

"Haha, she does worse than that." It wasn't really possible for me to redeem Řeřicha, that's just the way she is. "Pretty sure that this girl must have been taking something she wasn't in control of, though, Řeřicha wouldn't allow her to do as much."

[8/14]

>> ☐ Ratmie 11/16/14(Sun)16:01:31 No.36206241

"She rammed into a shelf, hit herself on my door handle, and would drop books, or leave them lying, yes. That shouldn't be allowed. But I remember she also fell from a ladder once, so she was probably just that inept. Still focused underneath it all, though. As long as you actually got her attention."

Umika had then leaned in, quzically. "Say. Do you have a lot of experience with addicts?"

What an odd question. I couldn't say yes to it.

"You probably do, though. You only think of her doing drugs right now, but addiction is the way people work. One of the many ways to approach psychology from ground up. This is something that really helps you understand people. We are different by what we choose to be weak towards. Or don't choose, but end up being, and that's the worse case. Think about it for a while."

That's an old one. As old as mankind, even.

Humans are born dependent without doubt. This is instilled in both genes, and in how we've built up society. You can argue that being born is an asset by itself, but after that, you'll grow up in debt. If you refuse this notion, you will start affirming what you can't help but subconsciously feel with artificial dependencies, up to even the drugs. Former addicts are usually religious. They were weak people to begin with, they needed guidance of some sort, and this kind won't get them killed.

But you see the exact same pattern in people that never did anything as dangerous and socially reprehensible. Such as, when rich kids become vegetarians. They don't do it just because, as they'd like to claim, they do it to compensate. And there is nothing wrong with that. Anything to believe in works.

Because the important part is, that they couldn't choose how they were born, but they chose this. Even if it looks nonsensical from an outsider's point of view, for them it's the kind of restraint that makes you strong. Something to hold onto, that makes them confident. Like an oath, a geás, if you will.

It's because limiting your options and allowing yourself to think less makes it easier to focus, an atheist would say.

While Umika was looking up the second file in the endless office drawers, mumbling letters to herself in funny english, I've tried to figure out where she was actually going with this, just like when I've been getting similar lessons long back in the basic training. She must have had something else to point out about Wagner, but wanted me to come to it on my own.

So, I thought on her some more. She didn't seem to care for herself a lot. She was without doubt an addict of some sort. She had an utter lack of presence. She threw arms around, which means lack of control over her motor functions. Umika was obviously implying that she was just obsessive about something, like stalker girls always look horrible. But that's just the start of the thought line, and it didn't really seem to be the case either. It probably wouldn't give me the best grade on the test she gave me here.

I've wanted to believe that a Librarian would be beyond saying things just to look smart.

There wasn't much else to say about herself, but thinking outside of the box, there is always the context to look at. From the standpoint of the commanding officer, Umika seems to say that she lacked skill and talent, but not discipline. At least not in the sense that Vanus understand it. I would call it Orwellian, but that's not a good comparison, since we are actually encouraged to realize. It's just that it also makes us realize how powerless we are against it, when we consider the scope.

Hence, Wagner was the perfect product of the Twelfth. She wanted to be used.

Does the Incubator groom these dependencies in us, when he strongly enforces vague rules? Resulting in discipline?

Or does he encourage thinking for ourselves and trusting nothing, because you can't rely on the rules? Resulting in personal empowerment?

[10/14]

With Wagner, it seems that the ideal is somewhere in the middle, resulting in weak will, but strong personality, if that makes sense. I guess that's not strictly a bad thing, considering our purpose. But it is "corruption", in every sense of the word.

By becoming blind to what has power over us, like an addict, we become led by wires we don't see.
By becoming focused on our path, like an actor that reads his lines rather than like an athlete that would seek to expand his freedom, we lose our strength.
Still, there is power to be found within this - we become tools, just like that train.

It causes cognitive dissonance, if you don't live in it for years. It's easy to mistake power for strength. You will generally ignore one or the other side.

Even I didn't realize this with such clarity until then. I guess an outsider like Umika would better know just what to point out. Because I revel in my perceived self-sufficiency, and wouldn't normally consider myself an addict, I didn't really think this way until then.

Wagner's file was resourceful and confirmed what I've thought. Made a wish to save family business which apparently dealt with furniture. Her most unique magical girl gimmick was her skill at math, which is just about the lamest one I've ever heard of. The Librarian who taught her was indeed Renata Lichtenberg - the non-deformed surname making it clear that she is not native. Her notes gave off the feeling of a teacher that tears the skin off you, and expects nothing less then perfection. They seemed anal to even me, and I am no expert on the topic. From memory, these are supposed to be offenses:

[11/14]

"Fixed a few letters with a liner and thought she could get away with it."
"Interrupted a scrying session. Argued she couldn't use a Seed in her trance state. Convinced she can't learn to."
"Questioned the reliability of wording the Gathering contracts with Sixth had, but only after having finished sealing them all."
"Still couldn't work with Pascal after two weeks."
"Woke up from only a ladder being moved near by."
"Has never heard of the Blood Knight."
"After being taken off the task for ruining too many, inquired whether weaving a magical signature seal on documents ranked E is a waste when we could just stamp it with ink. Couldn't do them right any more today. Rest granted, still has two whole stacks in F-4 to go through tomorrow. Assigned to a cram course afterwards."

Strangely enough, this worked with Wagner, while it almost never does with anyone else. Towards the end of the file, Wagner has got all Bs and an occasional A, where Renata probably didn't manage to find any fault.

And then she sent her to try out what turned out to be a highly volatile piece of machinery, and she died horribly, and the cat said that Renata is going to want to hear just how horrible the death was, with juicy details. I had really wanted to smash that bitch's face already. This was wrong from every imaginable perspective - human, incubator, mine.

Umika had asked casually whether I've learned anything, and I had to truthfully reply "Nothing I couldn't guess." This seemed to tip her off that I am actually really serious about this all, and after slight hesitation, she offered a penny for my thoughts. Kája's Witch being possibly related to the ever-elusive harvest Witch Libuna would probably intrigue her more, but that was classified to hell and back. At least I could still share Wagner's whole story with her.

So, I did that.

[12/14]

>> ☐ Ratmie 11/16/14(Sun)16:05:40 No.36206338

After I was done, it turned out that I wasn't. Umika reaffixed her glasses on the bridge of her nose, looking deep into my eyes. She seemed to weigh her upcoming words on her tongue for a while. Finally, she said it. "It's a pretty boring Witch, for a professional. So, well. I'll try to stick my nose in. Why are you so bothered by this? Could you give me a hint on what makes this one so special? You didn't know her yourself, am I getting this right?"

Right. "I am just grabbing the first thing of the sort that I saw, I guess. There's going to be big changes around here soon." The girl before me didn't even flinch at such news, just listened with perfect focus, like a sickeningly well brought up kid. "I may be actually more or less in charge then, so I want to do a bit of a cleanup first.", I told her.

"You seemed like you've got something more to say. Like, your opinion on that story. You shouldn't keep that in. Tunnel vision, outsider's perspective, and all that." She placed more of her body on the table, further lowering her stature, already tiny next to mine. I guess she wanted to look like a humble listener, and it worked. This girl knows how to pull people's strings.

Alright, I could have used advice. Before I knew it, I shared a bit more of my worries with her.

Both files had in common the utter lack of closure. What were you supposed to think? The lives of these two were all sound and fury. Not to say that the laws of storytelling apply to reality in any way, but it really made me want to make these lives count. To make them into martyrs, twist them into something they never were. Immortalize them in form in which they would never want to live.
It's absurd. The number of individual girls I see come and go every year has four digits. There was no way I could ever fix anything, lest I forced some twisted justification on in it, completely detached from what I felt.

>> ☐ Ratmie 11/16/14(Sun)16:06:45 No.36206356

And that wouldn't be right. Screw what the cat and Panna say, these girls were dying in vain for all they knew. I understood too well why this was happening, why I had to allow it, and the fatality of it all was killing me. Made me want to burn down this whole place, because no world sustained by something like this could be worth it. I couldn't stop thinking about it anymore, trying to reach some sort of a resolution.

But I could still go on and finish my job. It's how I lived for five years. Kill one more Witch, and then tomorrow. I've gotta do what I've gotta do. Martina had once asked me why I never have a breakdown like everyone else, and I honestly didn't know what to tell her.

I can't believe I still consider myself sane. Not a good person, though. In the end, a lot less people suffer, all because I don't care about it as much as I should, and have enough integrity to save the pieces when everything breaks. I hear this a lot. That I am so strong, I can live with anything. I won't be crushed - no matter how much it hurts. "Fortitude" is the right word. But at this point, it's not an admirable trait, it's something monstrous.

Umika laughed at this, to my boundless bewilderment. "Bullshit. That's a good trait. Real talk, I could tell you whatever switch in your head does it and help you fix it, but I guarantee you'd feel robbed." Her voice now on a much lower pitch, it felt a bit like finding the gangster in a group activity game. She was saying some outrageous things, at that. "If you aren't in a hurry, would you come with me? I think I may have some things to share with you myself."

Looking back on it, I realize she acted oddly from the start of this all. Like she knew this wasn't an everyday victim check, like she already knew the news. I suspect she may have cheated with her magic a tiny bit, to get me to open up more.

And, you know what? I'll be damned if that wasn't the start of a good friendship.

MAGICAL GIRL NOIR QUEST
THE FALL OF CHIAKI MATSUDA

☐ Magical Girl Noir Quest Deculture 11/21/14(Fri)10:00:23 No.36303972 Archived

You nod. You do have questions of your own for Yuma, and make them known clearly - something that your Kill-Team seems to approve of, with Kyoko and Sayaka trading knowing glances, Midori smiling, and Mami simply nodding to herself. Wendy is the only one who doesn't react - if anything, she seems to be busy trying not to make eye contact at all, her gaze firmly locked on a particularly uninterestingspot on the floor between her boots.

...Anyway. Your Culexus Rank Leader takes a moment to answer, and when she finally does, it's with a hesitation that you're not sure if it's simply an effect of her voice-mangling helmet vox, or something else entirely. Something that she'd probably want for you not to point out to the rest of your squad, either way.

"I realize that I may have to teleport more than five people out of the Akashic Realm, Warmaster, not counting Miss Rea in Tiny Pete." Yuma shakes her head. "I've asked the Incubator for help in this regard, and he's agreed to allocate some resources for me to manage the extra load." Another pause as she reaches up with a gloved hand to touch her throat. "I'm confident that it should be enough to get at least one more passenger on the return trip."

Just one more, huh. But what if she staggers the amount of passengers? Make two trips with less than five people each? Wouldn't that work?

>> ☐ Deculture 11/21/14(Fri)10:01:50 No.36303987

>>36303972

Yuma shakes her head. "It doesn't work that way, Warmaster. One by one or in a group, that's my capacity. Five is already pushing my limits, and six is impossible without assistance."

...Fine. You'll have to take what you can get.

Last question, then. Is she really up to--

"I apologize if I speak out of turn," Your Culexus barks now, cutting you off. "But I AM up to the task, Warmaster. I've been inactive long enough, and bed rest is something that all Culexus actively try not to waste too much time with." The gloved hand at her throat now forms a fist at her chestplate, in an archaic salute. "I am here to serve. I am here to do my duty."

Kyoko grins at you, optimism incarnate. "You heard the kid, Murderface. She'll be fine, no need to nag her about it."

You frown at the red-haired Eversor. You just wanted to be sure, that's all. The last thing you want is the Officio's last remaining Culexus crumbling to ash in her suit because you didn't give her a chance to take a fucking breather--

"Nah. Yuma-chan can take it. Kid's tough - probably tougher than you." Your best friend's grin widens as she gives her spear a lazy one-handed twirl, the angular blade gleaming as it catches the overhead lights. "In fact, every Culexus that went through Malal's Culexus training turned out to be legitimate hardasses, every single one - an' Yuma-chan's no exception. She just kinda gets difficult from time to time, but that's youth for ya."

You nod in agreement. Yeah, you can understand that. Youths.

"...I'm right here, you know," Yuma's somber, determined tone is briefly replaced with a plaintive one. "Warmaster, Miss Kyoko, I appreciate your concern, but--"

"Yeah, yeah. We know you can hack it. We get it."

"Murderface is just scared you'll teleport her into a dimension where there's no whisky or pancakes, that's all." Sayaka cuts in, and this diffuses the tension somewhat - the unexpected joke causing smiles and chuckles from all over.

Only somewhat, though. It's still there, palpable, a stretched-taut sensation hanging in the air.

This is a dangerous operation, and not everyone might make it back alive.

"Alright, let's settle down, everyone." Mami claps both her hands, her voice of warm honey a clear and almost shocking contrast from the rough-edged voices that had filled the room earlier with growls, grumbling and cackling. "Can I have your attention for a moment? Good. Midori-san, please go ahead and distribute the teleportation beacons. Everyone, please take one."

At this apparent signal, it's here that Midori also walks forward, holding what looks like a metal tray full of bulky black wristwatches. You also note that Mami is already wearing one on her wrist, its face glowing a soft amber.

"These are the teleportation beacons we'll be using for today's operation. This is for a one-way trip back." She points to the glowing dial.

"To activate its functions, simply press down on the watch face for three full seconds. Three seconds, that's all. This'll give Yuma-san a signal for her to easily lock onto, and pull you back into reality with our teleporter. If you change your mind, simply press down once, and that should deactivate it. That's it!" Mami smiles. "Just make sure it has a snug, secure fit around your wrist, and we're golden!"

...Right. Three seconds. You take one of the bulky things from the tray, and cinch it around your wrist, the catch locking solidly into place. The watch dial immediately glowing a bright purple, before darkening into a rather disconcerting black.

"Is everyone ready, then?" The blonde Magical Girl calls again after a few minutes. "Please give your gear and supplies a last-minute check before we proceed. Opportunities for on-field resupply will be a bit of a forlorn hope in this operation at best. Succeed or fail, we'll only have one shot at this--"

"COMING THROUGH! MISAKA IS COMING THROUGH!" The doors to Kyuubey's Office slides open, and all inside turn to look at a short, grease-blackened phantasm stride its way into the office proper - leaving behind a rather cheeky trail of dripping motor oil. "SPECIAL DELIVERY TO BIG SISTER MURDERFACE! CANNOT BE STOPPED!"

Wait. That's...Misaka? You blink as the filthy creature spots you, and it's with a squeal of joy that it immediately runs full-tilt at your direction. Managing to avoid tripping itself up on its own slippery feet. When it finally stops in front of you, it's here that you recognize your surrogate little sister underneath what looks like layers of dried oil, grease and engine lubricant.

How did she get so filthy...?

"Big Sister Murderface! Ran all the way here! Misaka is done!" The grime-encrusted russian beams up at you. "Tiny Pete is locked and loaded with Mystery Loadout! Teleporter Beacon is here!" She thrusts what feels like a thick metal coin, hastily wrapped in a ball of tissue paper, into your hands. "Misaka worked hard! Misaka worked really, really hard!" A pause. "W-well, maybe Ashford and Stupid Robot Girl helped a tiny bit again, but there!"

Ahh, so that's why. You shake your head, shoving the Beacon into your Inventory, noting that Misaka was considerate enough to make sure that the device got to you in a pristine state - even going so far as to ball it up in tissue. That's....well, that's youth for you.

"Graaaah, Misaka will get clean later! Go away!" Misaka hisses at Sayaka's reaching hands, one of them already clutching what appears to be a fistful of moistened baby wipes. She looks back up at you again, expectant, hopeful. "Did Misaka do a good job, Big Sister Murderface?"

Of course she did a good job, you tell her, patting her grimy hair for good measure, making the small russian blush with joy and pride.

"Ahahaha! Misaka does her best!" Your surrogate little sister giggles, both hands clutching at her cheeks. "Only for Big Sister Murderface!"

...Well, looks like you're set, then. Muramasa sheathed at your hip, the Desert Eagle in your shoulder holster and Tiny Pete's teleportation beacon in your inventory. You can't be more prepared.

This thing going to happen, or what?

"As soon as everyone else is ready." Mami smiles. "Is everyone, then?" She calls out, and the rest of your Kill-Team responds in agreement. Your voice joining theirs in chorus.

"Well, then." The blonde nods at you, her smile widening the slightest bit. "This is your operation, Warmaster. Any final words before this operation finally begins?"

You feel the eyes of everyone in the room focus upon you as she says those words - just as the Shield on your arm starts to click. Slowly, faintly, barely loud enough to hear, but there.

How do you react?

You look at the faces of each member of your Kill-Team, one by one. "One way or another, we're coming back with our main objective." You say clearly, loudly, your voice echoing in the brief silence of the cavernous Incubator's Office.

Your gaze briefly stopping at Midori, who flashes you a smile and a thumbs-up. You nod at her, and turn back to Mami, meeting her warm amber eyes with your own.

"Everything else, you have my permission to kill."

"Well said!" Your blonde goddess of victory smiles, clapping briefly, before turning to your Incubator and the Culexus standing beside him. "Then, Kyuubey-san, Yuma-san?"

Kyuubey nods and taps something on his desk's keyboard, just as Yuma herself touches a gloved hand to the side of her helmet. The lines of her hardsuit glowing blue, then orange, before finally settling on a bright, pulsating red.

"Connected to the Teleporter's Animus Machinae," The Culexus murmurs, her helmet's vox-speakers broadcasting her words in an irritated-sounding growl. "Coordinates set. All systems green and charging for teleportation." A harsh burst of static, followed by a series of frantic-sounding clicks, and Yuma's voice comes back. "Twenty seconds to teleportation flare. Nineteen. Eighteen. Seventeen--"

The room lights flicker once, twice, before dying a slow, programmed death into darkness - a darkness that is then quickly vanquished by circles of light etching themselves on the floor, bearing names and ranks, one for each member of your Kill-Team.

And just like how they declared each of your Kill-Team's ranks and monikers, they also revealed brief, candid glimpses of their personalities as they braced themselves for the trauma of teleportation.

Mami standing stock still, eyes closed and beret clutched to her chest, as if to pay her respects.

Sayaka and Kyoko standing together, hand in hand, fingers interlaced in a rare moment of intimacy, while their free hands curled around their weapons with the same fervent grip that they held on to each other.

Wendy standing beside Mami, testing the edge of her knife against her thumb, before shoving it back into its sheath strapped to her hip. Only to pull it back out and repeat the entire process a moment later.

And then there's you. Standing alone, the circle underneath your feet declaring you to be Warmaster of the Ninth Officio, with your adopted name written in bold, stark lettering. Not Murderface, but--

"Chiaki!"

You look up, and see Midori running towards you. You have enough time to blink before your Callidus catches you in another hug. One brief, desperate one that has you gasping. She whispers something into your ear, fervent, almost like a prayer. Or a blessing. Perhaps even something as simple as an appeal.

Or maybe all three, all at once. You're not sure.

"Please be safe, Chiaki. I love you."

"FIVE!" Yuma is roaring from her vox now, over a deafening hum of machinery that had suddenly come out of nowhere, juxtaposed with the whine of something dangerously massive cycling up to release its accumulated charge. "MISS MIDORI, GET CLEAR! THREE! TWO--!"

One moment before that final count - a split second before you're sent screaming into the hell behind reality - and it's here that Midori finally pulls away from you.

Her tearful face is the last thing you see before the world disappears in a million shades of black.

And the last thing you hear just before the world falls away underneath you is your own screaming.

Wait. Something's...wrong.

Teleportation's supposed to be instantenous.

It shouldn't be a matter of perception, either. This should have been quick - traumatic, maybe, but it was supposed to be quick.

Something's wrong! Something's fucked with the teleportation!

Still blind, still trapped in the darkness, you grope around for the beacon strapped to your wrist. Panic making your movements sluggish, fear making them clumsy.

Fuck if you're going to end up trapped here forever! Not like this, it can't end like this--

"...So they did find you." A strangely-familiar voice echoes in the choking, clasping darkness around you. "Surprising, then, to find out that they're actually useful for something."

What? Who's that? Who found you? Where--

You blink, and the very act of it banishes the darkness around you in one single instant. Revealing a blindingly-bright plain, empty and devoid of all life, as far as the eye can see. The jarring lack of anything to stand on also jarringly replaced by what feels like cold, slick marble under the soles of your heels.

...Jesus Christ, where the fuck did Yuma land you?

"Don't blame the poor thing. She hasn't much longer." The familiar voice rings again, this time from behind you - and you whirl around, automatically pulling your Golden Desert Eagle free from your shoulder holster. The gleaming, polished firearm all but singing as you slice it across the air to draw a bead on whoever had the fucking audacity to sneak up on you, and then revealed their presence with a soft-spoken sentence.

And you blink again as you realize that you're aiming your gun at yourself.

A paler, sluttier version of yourself.

With black wings, a black feathery dress, and a crimson ribbon tied to her hair.

"Have a care, you insignificant worm." She says softly in your own voice, raising your own gloved hand and pointing at the gun leveled at your own face. "Point that disgusting thing somewhere else."

How do you react?

Because there are always votes after the voting period ends.

You glare down the Golden Desert Eagle's sights, your finger tightening on the trigger.

It's her, you realize. It's that...that bitch that the Three Stooges had been so torn up about, with every mention of her coming from them tainted with either frustration, shame, or barely-kept rage.

But more than that - more than all of those combined - they spoke about her with a helpless, regretful guilt. A guilt that told spoke of their inability to reconcile themselves with the fact that there was nothing they could have done, instead holding on to the self-flagellating concept that if they had simply been strong enough, steadfast enough, LOYAL enough - this would never have happened. SHE would never have happened.

They hated her, they wanted her dead with all of their being - but at the same time, they felt guilty for her and for what she'd done. As if their own failures in their own timeline was proof enough that they were complicit about what this bitch did to everyone.

Not you, though. Not a single iota of guilt in your system for this smirking cunt in the black feathers and eyebags and skeletal wings. You feel guilty for what happened to Pinky, sure, in the times when she's not doing her level best to kill you. You feel guilty - and hate yourself accordingly - about what happened to Kharn. You feel guilty for what you did to Wendy, and hope that an opportunity will come down the line for you to be able to resolve things with her.

But not for this...Witch. Not for the is abomination staring at you like you're some sort of pathetic insect begging to be stomped.

Only hate. Only anger. Only a cold, killing rage that filled your veins with ice and froze your heart.

It would be so easy to simply pull the trigger--

--which is why you don't.

Slowly, carefully, you take your finger out of the trigger guard, and carefully slip the Desert Eagle back into its holster. All while keeping the winged abomination firmly in the center of your vision.

"Look at that. You can follow instructions after all. This is a day of many wonders." The raven-haired girl with the crimson ribbon seems to relax. Her wings, brutally-skeletal and sparsely-feathered, stretches out - momentarily displaying their full and fearsome wingspan, before folding back neatly behind their owner. Leaving little evidence that they were even there - besides, of course, the bony pinions resting behind the horror's bared shoulders.

"It's a bit disappointing you didn't shoot, though. That would've been nostalgic." The girl smiles.

You shake your head, feeling your lips curl into a reflexive scowl. Shooting her probably won't do much good to anyone, even you. Instead, you want some questions answered--

"And smart! That is exceedingly rare in our kind, even more in our..." Her smile widens. "...little extended family. Maybe, just maybe, you're actually the one they've been hoping would appear. Someone who'd fix everything, not that things needed fixing as it is."

She cackles then. A clear, almost lovely sound, enchanting in its pitch and tone. It sounded like music.

Music that, once listened to closely enough, would reveal the sound of a million voices screaming in pain in the background. In eternal torment.

"So, your first question." She nods to you, her crimson bow bobbing up and down. "I'm not going to answer that, because it'll just be insulting for the both of us. You know who I am already." She smiles again, revealing white, perfect teeth. "Your second question? Well, you know who they are. I won't talk about them, because once you do you summon one of them, and summoning one of them gets all the others piling in and they can be so annoying--"

"...Why are you doing this?"

The demon with the feathery black dress indecently hugging every curve of her form blinks at your question, before chuckling. "Somehow, I don't think you mean it like all the others did. You know, the why of it all - the big picture answer. Which is what I'll tell you, like I told the rest: I promised Madoka that I'll save her."

She pauses to turn her back on you, the hem of her dress brushing against the polished marble tile with a silken hiss, a sound surprisingly reminiscent to a blade being drawn from its sheath."Do you know what that means, Nameless One?" The Witch bearing your name whispers as she looks at you from over her shoulder, head tilted up and back. "Wipe that look of idiotic surprise off your face, of course I know what they call you. And I also know that you've been having trouble keeping your promises lately."

How did she--

"I hear enough, from the spirits of our fallen sisters." She whirls around, the skirt of her dress flaring out and scattering black feathers everywhere, each one as long as a combat knife's blade. Each one making the sound of a small bell as they slowly plummet to the floor in lazy, drifting spirals. "The Nameless One. Very heroic, in that understated, unappreciated way. Again, like you're supposed to fix everything, instead of being just..." The raven-haired monster shakes her head again, clicking her tongue as she gives you a once over, before unfurling her wings again. The motion enough to litter the air with another cloud of black feathers.

"As for the latter, well, that needs no foresight nor any mysticism to figure out. We ALL have problems with promises - making them, keeping them, breaking them. It's why we're here in the first place, isn't it?"

I made my promise to her bleeding, barely-coherent corpse, the both of us lying there in the blood and the mud and the shit of a city broken by a Witch that should never have existed. And I've broken it more times than I can bother to count. But now, with just one timeline left...there's a chance I can actually keep it."

She turns fully to face you, now. Skeletal, feather-bare wings still spread, as if about to take flight. "Which brings us neatly to my small-picture answer to your question, Nameless One. I'm doing this to state my case, to appeal to your - or our - better nature." The demon smiles and steps - no, glides forward. The movement unnatural and arresting enough that you're forced not to draw on her again. "Please, stop what you're doing."

...What?

"Stop what you're doing. Stop this...fight. Release the Golden Weapons from your vault, give them to who you think better deserves them. Just stop what you're doing, Nameless One, and go back to the simple, if degenerate life you've always enjoyed." Her voice takes on a pleading tone. "You've complained enough to yourself, haven't you? How things were much less complicated back then, where you're simply sent to kill people and get paid for it? You wish to go back to those days, don't you?"

...

"Do it. I'll send you back, and you can leave all of this and start anew, wherever you want. Let Madoka ride out her tantrums, let the Chosen play out their lives in the fever of the Golden Weapons, let the Officios drown in the oceans of blood the Champions of the Blessed Lady will make upon the world. Let things happen as they should, and it will all take care of itself. I get my Madoka back, and you...you can live out your days smoking and drinking without anyone to bother you about it."

I'll even let you keep those salt licks you endearingly call 'Midori' and 'Wendy'. But for everything else, allow things to run their course. It will be much easier for everyone, in the end."

She holds out a hand, her smile widening into a grin.

I'll count them both as votes for NO, but whichever wins between shooting kneecaps and shaking heads will win as the sub-action.

Magical Juggernaut Heather Crunch II

Here we stand amidst a sea of fire, the Soul Temperer and I. Hills have crumbled in our clash. Trees have become ash and timber. CHASMS have opened, both by my blows and by her own power. The heat has grown so intense that bits of rubble have begun to -melt-. She has been battered, bruised, and bloodied, yet still she stands tall. Panting, perhaps, but still going. Meanwhile, I myself have not a SINGLE scratch to show for her efforts.

…So why am I so tired? It's just barely sunset, and already I am feeling fatigued from the fight. I'm leaning against my Eversword for support after a scant few hours of heated combat!

"Is this all that you are capable of, Truth-Seeker?" the Soul Temperer scoffs, sheathing her weapon. The flames around us die, and the Valley of Eight Million Gods grows dark. "A scuffle until the sun's rays die down? Need you the light of the heavens to guide your sword, rather than your own inner light?"

"HA!" I shout, breathing heavily and wiping the sweat from my brow. "I barely felt your attacks!"

"Then do you intend to simply stand there and weather my blows, o crumbling mountain?" the Soul Temperer sneers, not showing any trace of a smile. "You are in no shape to fight back."

Gritting my teeth, I pull my Eversword out and shakily approach my opponent. Even ignoring its weight doesn't make me feel any lighter, and I end up using it as a crutch. Still, I INSIST, "I can still fight!"

She refuses to believe me. "Walk toward me under your own power, Seeker of Enlightenment," she retorts, arms folded, "and I will believe you."

"Nngh..." I groan, pulling my blade out and immediately stumbling. The bitter taste of ash fills my mouth as I fall.

"It is said more can be learned from failure than victory," the Soul Temperer explains, pulling me up until we’re nose to nose. “Come; let us sift for knowledge in the sands of battle, back at the temple.”

…Get your hands off my butt.

There is something calming about this room. It’s not the large, deep fountain bubbling away at the center. It’s not the arrangement of sand, rocks, and plants in the corner. And it’s definitely not the ‘bed’ of spikes that the Soul Temperer is sitting on the edge of.

No, it’s the swords that line the walls. SWORDS! Blades from all over the world, each hung up as a trophy of BATTLE! Some in better shape than others, but ALL of them lovingly preserved! It reminds me of home, and makes me feel somewhat less anxious.

“Now then, Seeker of Truth,” begins the Soul Temperer, “let us unravel the thread of the quilt that smothers you. What do you believe is the problem?”

“…I’ve been having strange thoughts since I’ve arrived here,” I inform her, hands curling into fists and cheeks burning in shame. “They distract me, and LEECH away at my strength and conviction!”

“It sounds like an influence from a malevolent spirit,” the Soul Temperer observes.

“Yes, a curse,” I muse. “One that FILLS my mind with doubt and-“I shudder in displeasure, the word leaving a bitter taste in my mouth “-lust.”

The Soul Temperer leans forward, getting uncomfortably close. “And these thoughts of lust,” she inquires, “toward whom are they being directed?”

“A sadistic, sociopathic DEMON!” I snarl, roaring the accursed name: “NAKAJIMAAAA!”

“Oh.” The Soul Temperer falls back, disappointed. She takes a moment to speak again, asking, “Which one?”

“Er… The incessantly cheery one,” I clarify. “Amber.”

“The Child of Chaos,” she murmurs.

I nod in agreement, though the Soul Temperer says no more. I speak again, my voice quiet as my face grows hotter, “…things happened the other day and now she keeps invading my mind, making me wonder if I should have let her leave when she did.” I gaze imploringly at the Soul Temperer, beseeching her, “How do I lift this despicable curse?”

The Soul Temperer smiles, and patronizingly pats me on the head. “Seeker of Enlightenment, you are not cursed,” she declares. “You are merely ill.”’

YES! VINDICATION! “I KNEW-“I start, but she cuts me off! STOP DOING THAT! AND STOP TOUCHING ME!

The Soul Temperer …giggles, for some reason, and then explains my malady to me clearly: “You are lovesick.”

“…-WHAT-?” I scream, my body all but bursting into flames from a sudden rush of heat.

“What you are suffering from is infatuation,” she continues, folding her hands over her chest. “It is the budding flower that, if nurtured, blossoms into love.”

“WHY?!” I implore her. “HOW?!!” My hands instinctively fly to cover my face and hide my shame. No no no, this is not happening. This CANNOT be happening!

“Love finds a way,” the Soul Temperer insists. “It is, after all, the strongest force in the universe; a fundamental truth, more important than any science or magic!”

“I just…” I try to make words, but my tongue’s tied. I struggle against it, whispering, “ME? And HER?” There’s no way…

Yet it makes so much sense. It explains -everything-.
